The Nazi War Crimes and Japanese Imperial Government Records Interagency Working Group

The U.S. National Archives and Records Administration

Records of the Central Intelligence Agency (Record Group 263)

Index of Subject Files First Release

Subject File TitleVol #RC Box # Location
Analysis of the Personality of Adolph Hitler 01 2000/06/02

Analysis of

The Personality of Adolph Hitler

With Predictions of His Future Behavior

and

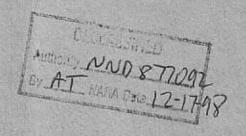

Suggestions for Dealing With Him

Now and After

Germany's Surrender

-

By HENRY A. MURRAY, M. D. Harvard Psychological Clinic

OCTOBER, 1943

RETURN TO ANOMINES & RESORDS CENTER IMMEDIATELY AFTER USE

JOB 57-75 BOX

429133

ANALYSIS OF THE PERSONALITY OF ADOLF HITLER

with predictions of his future behavior

and

suggestions for dealing with him now and after Germany's surrender

Henry A. Murray, M. D. Harvard Psychological Clinic

FOREWORD

Aim

The sim of this memorendum is (1) to present an analysis of Adolf Hitler's personality with an hypothetical formulation of the manner of its devalopment; (2) on the basis of this, to make a few pradictions as to his conduct when confronted by the mounting successes of the Allies; and (3) to offer some suggestions as to how the U.S. Government might now influence his mental condition and behavior (assuming it assessed fit to do so), and might deal with him, if teken into custody, after Germany's surrander.

elity is important as a step in understanding the psychology of the typical Nazi, and - since the typical Nazi sxhibits a strain that has, for a long time, been pravalent among Garmans - as a step in understanding the psychology of the German people. Hitler's unprecedented appeal, the elevetion of this man to the status of a demi-god, can be explained only on the hypothesis that he and his ideology have almost exactly met the needs, longings, and centiments of the majority of Germans.

The attainment of a clear impression of the psychology of the German people is essential if, after surrender, they are to be converted into a peace-loving nation that is willing to take its proper place in a world society.

Sourcee of Information for this Analysis: -

Ae is well known, there ere no thoroughly rsliable sources of information about Hitler's early life and what is known about him einca 1918 is in many respects insufficient or contradictory.

This analysis has been based, for the most part, on the following material:

- 1. Date supplied by the Office of Strategic services
- Hitler's MEIN KAMPF, New York, Rsynel & Hitchcock, 1939
- 3. Hitler's MY NEW ORDER, Naw York, Reynal & Hitchcock, 1941
- 4. Heiden, K., HIILER, A BIOGRAPHY, London, 1936
- 5. Rauschning, H., VOICE OF DESTRUCTION, Naw York
- 6. Baynes, H. G., GERMANY POSSESSED, London, 1941

It is generally agreed that MEIN KAMPF is not to be relied on as a factual document, but as the translatore say in the introduction to the American edition, this work "is probably the best written avidence of the character, the mind, and the spirit of Adolf Hitler." An enalysis of the metaphore used in MEIN KAMPF has proved rewarding in the ettempt to discover the underlying forces of his personality.

MY NEW ORDER, edited by Rousey de Salas, has also been utilized extensively.

MAN - NOTES FOR A CASE HISTORY (Jour. of Abn. & Soc. Psychol., 1942, 37, 295-308), was written under my general supervision and contains most of the ideas of Professor G. W. Allport end myself on this topic so far as they were crystallized in the fall of 1941. This article by Vernon is included in toto as an introduction, thereby relieving me of the necessity of restating (in the detailed analysis that follows) all the downonly known facts.

CONTENTS OF THIS MEMORANDUM

- Section 1. Summary of the Entire Memorandum.
- by W. H. D. Vernon (the best available short outline of Hitler's psrsonality).
- Section 3. (Summary, Part A) Detailed Analysis of Hitler's Personelity (written especially for psychologists, psychietriats).
- Section 4. (Summary, Part B) Predictions of Hitler's Behavior in the Coming Future.
- Section 5. (Summery, Part C) Suggestions for the Treatment of Hitler, Now and After Garmany's Surrender.
- Section 5. (Summary, Part D) Suggestions for the Treetment of Germany.

SECTION 1

Condensed Review of the Entire Memorandum

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

containing

- A. Brief Analysis of Hitlar's Personality.
- B. Predictions of Hitler's Behavior.
- C. Suggestions for the Treatment of Hitler.
- D. Suggestions for the Treatment of the German People.

Submitted by Henry A. Murray, M.D.

Harvard Paychological Clinic, Cambridge, Maesechueette.

Committee for National Morale,
New York.

- A. Brief Anelyeie of Hitler's Personality
- There is little disagreement emong professional, or even among amateur, psychologiete that Hitler's personality is an example of the countersective type, a type that is marked by intense and stubborn efforts (1) to overcome early disabilities, weaknesses and humiliations (wounds to self-esteen), and sometimes also by efforts (ii) to revenge injuries and insults to pride. This is achieved by means of en respect, prestige, fame.

Idealego. Reaction Formation which involves (1) the repression and denial of the inferior portions of the self, and (11) etrivings to become (or to imagine one has become) the exact opposite, represented by an idealego, or image of a superior self successfully accomplishing the onca-impossible feats and thereby ouring the wounds of pride and winning general

This is a very common formula, normal (within limits) and widely admired in Western cultures, but in Hitler's case all the conetituent forces of the pattern are compulsively extrems, and based on a weak neurotic structural foundation. The chief trands are these: (1) Counteractive Nead for Dominance, Superiority; (2) Counteractive Aggression, Revenge; (3) Repression of Conscience, Compliance, Love; (4) Projection of Criticizable Elements of the Salf.

Superiority. - The devalopmental formula for this is as follows: (1) intolerable feelings of inferiority (partly because of yielding to the will of a harsh and unjust person), lasting to (11) contempt of own inferior traits (weekness, timidity, eubmiceivaneaa) and the fixed determination to repress them in oneaelf and to condemn them in othera, accompanied by (iii) edmiration end envy of power in othera and a vicion of self as ultimately superior (ideelego) leeding to (iv) repected efforta to become superior (counteraction out of wounded pride), ancouraged by momenta of extreme aelf-confidence in which one believae oneaelf the equal of one's viaion.

This, as we have eaid, is a very common form of development, but in Hitler the trend is so intense end the commonly balancing forces (affection, conscience, self-criticism, humor) are so weak that we are justified in speaking in speaking of megaloments (delusions of omnipotence), deepite that feet that the man has succeeded in getting e large proportion of the German people to believe that he is superior: (i) that he has been divinely appointed to leed them to power end glory, and (ii) that he is never wrong and hence must be followed with blind obdience, come what may.

Hitler's underlying inferiority feelinge, his basic self-contempt are shown by his choosing as criteria of superiority (traits of idealege) attributes and capacities that are the very opposite of what he is himself or once was. This may be illustrated by his fervent sulogy of (a) brute strength; (b) purity of blood; and (c) fertility.

1. (e) Admiration of Brute Strength, Contempt of Weaknass.—Hitler has always worshipped physical force, militery conquast, end ruthless domination. He has respected, envisa, and emulated the tschniques of power, even when manifested by a hated ensmy. From first to last he has expressed contempt of weakness, indecision, lack of energy, feer of conscience;

and yet -

Hitler has many Weaknesses. - There is e large femining component in his constitution. As a child he was freil and eickly, smotionally dependent on his mother. He never did any manual work, never engaged in athletice, was turned down as forever unfit for conscription in the Austrian Army. Afraid of his father, his behavior wee outwardly submissive, and later he was annoyingly subservient to his superior officers. Four years in the Army, he never rose above the rank of corporal. At the end he broke down with a war neurosis, hysterical blindness. Evan lately, in all his glory, he suffers frequent emotional collspsea in which he yells and weeps. He has nightmares from a bad conscience; and he has long spells when energy, confidence and the power of decision abandon him. Sexually he is a full-fledged mescohist/

Blood, Contempt of Jewish, Slav and other Blood. Hitler has always extelled the superior qualities of pure, unmixed, and uncorrupted German blood. He admires the aristocreoy. Concurrently he has never ceased expressing his centempt of the lower classes and his avarsion to admixtures of the blood of other races, of Jewish blood especially;

and yet -

Beyond Reproach. Hitler comes from illiterate

peasent stock derived from a mixture of races, no

pure Germans among them. His father was illegitimate, was married three times, and is said to have been conspicuous for sexual promiscuity. Hitler's mother was a domestic servent. It is said that Hitler's father's father was a Jew, and it is certain that his godfather was e Jew; and that one of his sisters managed a restaurant for Jewish students in Visnna

and another was, for a time, the mistrees of e Jew.

Hitler's appearance, when he wore a long beard during his outcast Vienne days, was said to be very Jawish.

Of these feets he is evidently schamed. Unlike Napoleon, he has rejected all his relations.

As a partial explenetion of his complex about impurity of blood it may be eaid that as e boy of twelve, Hitler was caught engaging in some eaxual experiment with a little girl; and later he seems to have davaloped a syphilophobia, with a diffuse fear of centamination of the blood through contact with a woman. It is elmost certain that this irrational dread was partly due to the esacciation in his mind of aexuality and excretion. He thought of sexual relations as comething exceedingly filthy.

1. (c) Advocacy of Pertility. - Fertility, the family as the braeding ground of warriors, multiplication of the German race - these have been cardinal points in Hitler's ideology;

end yet -

Hitlor himself is Impotent. - He is unmarried end his old ecquaintences sey that he is incapable of consummating the sexual act in a normal fachion. This infirmity we must recognize as an inetigation to exhorbitant cravinge for superiority. Unable to demonstrate mals power before a woman, he is impslled to compensate by exhibiting unsurpsessd power before men in the world at lerge.

Hitler could naither change his origins nor decree his potency, and unlike Museolini he has never tried to develop himself physically, but he became for a while the most powerful individual in the world, primarily by the use of mass-intoxicating words. Aristotle has eaid that the metaphor is the most potent force on earth, and Hitler, master of crude metaphor, has confirmed the dictum in this generation. By seducing the masses with his eloquence, and getting them to accept him ea their divinsly appointed guide, he compelled the smaller circles of industrielists, politivoisne and military leaders to fall into line elec.

Hitler spasking before e large audience ie e man possoeesd, comparable to e primitiva medicine man, or shaman. He is the incarnation of the crowd's unspoken needs end cravings; and in this eenes he has been oreated, end to e large extent invented, by the people of Germany.

Hitler has compared the masses to a woman who must be courted with the arts and skills known to passion only; and it is not unlikely that the emotional source of his orginatic speeches were childhood tantrums by which he successfully appealed to his ever-indulgent mother.

- Pattern. Counteraction is essential to the development of strength, but in Hitler's case it has been extravagent and frantio. He has not ascended step by step, building the structure of his character solidly as he went; but instead has rushed forward with panting haste, pretentiously. As a result, there is a great distance between Hitler at his best and Hitler at his worst; which means that when he is overcome at last by a greater force he will collapse suddenly and completely and as an utter wreck.
- 2. Counteractive Aggression, Revenge. That the will to power and the craving for superiority can not account for the whois of Hitler's psychology is evidenced by his immeesurable hatred, hatred expressed in the absence of an adequate stimulus, an incessant need to find some object on which to vent his pent-up wrath. This can be traced back with relative certainty to experiences of insult, humiliation and wounded pride in childhood. The eouroe of such insults, we have many reasons to believe, was Hitler's father, a cosrse boastful man who ruled his wife (twenty-three years younger than himself) and his children with tyrennical severity and injustice.

2. (a) Explanation. The hypothesis is sdvancad, supported by much evidence, that as a boy Hitlsr wee severely shocked (as it were, blinded) by witnessing sexual intercourse between his parents, and his resection to this treuma was to swear revenge, to drasm of himself as resatablishing the lost glory of his mother by overcoming and humiliating his fether. The boy's relative weekness made this action impossible, and so the drive and passion of revenge was repressed and locked up within him under tension. Only much later when a somewhat similar stimulus occurred the subjugation and humiliation of his motherland (Eitler's term for Germany) in 1918 - was this energy of revenge released, after a short period of abook and hysterical blindness.

This would axplain the fact that Hitler exhibited no energetic embitious drive of his own from the age of 13 years (when his father, the enemy, died) to the age of 29 years (when a new enemy, the conqueror of the motherland, appeared). It also helps to account for Hitler's relentless devotion to the rehabilitation of Germany, a fact which is hard to explain in a man who is so extremely egocentric in other relations.

In Mein Kampf Hitler repeatedly speaks of Germany as a beloved woman.

(Note. In this connection it may be said that the avidence is in favor of Hitler's having experienced the common Oedipus Complex (love of mother, hate of father), but that in his case this pattern was repressed and submerged by another pattern: profound admiration, envy and emulation of his father's masculine power and a contempt of his mother'e feminine submissiveness and weakness. Thus both parents were ambivalent to him: his fether was hated and respected; his mother was loved and deprecieted. Hitler's conspicuous actions have all been in imitation of his father, not his mother.)

Whether this genetical hypothesia is correct or not, it is certain that there is a vast reservoir of resentment and revenge in Hitler's make-up which accounts for his cult of brutality and his many acts of inexcusable destructiveness and cruelty. He is possessed by what amounts to a homicidal compulsion which has no vent in a "weak piping time of peace" (unless he became an outright criminal), and therafore ha has constantly pushed events toward war, or scepegoating.

- 2. (b) Significance of Ravenge. As a result of the fact that resentment is the mainspring of Hitler's career, it is forever impossible to hope for any mercy or humans trestment from him. His revengefulness can be satisfied only by the extermination of his countless enemies.
- Unlike Goering and other associates, Hitler is no healthy amoral brute. He is a hive of secret neurotic compunctions and feminine santimentalities which have had to be stubbornly rapreased ever eince he embarked on his caraer of ruthless dominance and revenge (instigated by real or supposed insults). Every new act of unusual cruelty, such as the purge of 1934, has been followed by a period of anxiety and depletion, agitated dejection and nightmares, which can be interpreted only as the unconscious operation of a bad conscience. Hitlar wants nothing so much as to srrive at the state where he can commit crimae without guilt feelings; but despite his bosats of having transcended Good and Evil this had not been possible. The suicidal trend in his personality is eloquent testimony of a rspressed self-condsmning tendency.

In conjunction with the repression of consciencs and the advance of hate there has hesn a repression of affection and sympathy as if "his spirit eesmed to ohide such weakness as unworthy of its pride," e recotion which cometimes occurs in childhood after an experience of unbearable disillusionment occasioned. by the felt trachery of a beloved person. One may find "e vigilence of grief that would compel the soul to hate for having loved too well." Hitler'e affilietive tendencies have always bean very weak; he has never had any close perconal friends; he is entirely incapable of normal human relationships. This is due, in part, to the ceesation in early life of sexual development.

Paradoxical as it may sesm, Hitler's repeated orimes are partly oaused by consolence and the necessity of appeasing it. For having once set out on a life of crime, the man can not turn back without roversing his entire ground for pride and taking the humilieting peth of self-abasement and atonement. The only method he has of subduing his mounting unconscious guilt is to commit another eot of aggreesion, and so to prove, as it were, by the criterion of success, that his policy is favored by fortune and therefore justified and right. Failure is the only wrong.

- Conscience by Successful Criminality. As soon as the time comes when repeated offensive actions end in failure, Fitler will lose faith in himself end in his destiny, and become the helplees viotim of his represend conscience, with suicide or mental breakdown as the most likely outcome.
- 4. Projection of Criticizable Elements of the Self. Hitler perceives in other people the treits or tendencies that are criticizable in himself. Thus, instead of being devoured by the vulture of his own condemning conscience or of his own disdein, he can attack what he apperceives as avil or contamptible in the external world, and so remain unconscious (most of the time) of his own guilt or his own inferiority. This mechanism whereby a man see his own wicked impulses or weeknases in others, is called projection. It is one way, the perenoid way, of mainteining salf-esteem. The mechanism cours so constantly in Hitler that it is possible to get a very good idea of the repudiated portions of his own personality by noticing what he condomns in others - treachery, lying, corruption, war-mongering, etc. This mechaniam would have had more disastrous consequences for his sanity if he had not geined some governance over it by conaciously adopting (as good political strategy) the practice of blaming his opponents.

5. Parancid Symptoms. Hitler's dynamical pattern, as described, corresponds closely to that of parancid insanity. Indeed he has exhibited, at one time or another, all of the classical symptoms of parancid schizophrenia: hypersensitivity, panics of anxiety, irrational jeslousy, delusione of persecution, delusions of omnipotence and messiahship.

How is it, then, that Hitler has escaped confinament as a dangerous paychopath? This interesting question will be considered later.

5. Reactions to Opposition and Frustration. Opposition is the stimulus which startles Hitler into life. In the face of it his powers are gathered and augmented. When opposition becomes stronger resulting in severe frustration, his reaction has tantrum of rage and accueatory indignation ending in tears and celf-pity; succeeded by (ii) periode of inertia, exhaustion, malancholy and indecisive-neas (accompanied sometimes by hours of soute dejaction and disquisting nightmares) leading to recuperation; and finally (iii) confident and rasolute decision to counterattack with great force and ruthlessness. The entire cycle may run its course in 24 hours, or it may be weaks before the aggressive decision of the third stage is reached.

For years this pattern of reaction to frustration has met with success; each counterattack has brought Hitler nearer to his goal. Since the turn of fortune on the Russian front, however, the number of frustrations have increased and Hitler's counterstacks have failed, at times disactrously. There is no etructure for defense in Hitler's personality: he can only strike when inflated with confidence, or collapse when confidence abandone him.

As time goes on, therefore, we can anticipate an increase in the intensity, frequency and duration of Hitler's periode of colleges, end a decrease in the confidence and power of his retaliations.

A point to be remembered about Hitler is that he started his career at scratch, a nonentity with nothing to lose, end he selected a fanatical path for himself which requires as an ending - complete succese (omnipotence) or utter failure (deeth). No compromise is possibls. Since it is not he personally who has to do the fighting, hie collapsee can occur in private at Berchtesgeden, whore he can reouperate, and then once agein come back with some new and always more desperate plan to destroy the There is a powerful compuleion in him to sacrifice himself and all of Germany to the revengeful annihilation of Western culture, to die, cragging all of Europe with him into the abyss. This he would feel was the last resource of an insulted end unendurable existence.

7. Need for Creation, Painting, Architecture,

German State, Legerd of Self. - We eurmiee that Hitler's early enthusiaem for painting was due to the fact (i) that this was the one exercise at which he excelled in school (snd thus it offered a compensa tory form of achievement); (ii) that it provided an acceptabla outlet for a destructive soiling tendency represeed in infancy; and (iii) that painting, and especially architecture later, also called for much constructivenese, which served to balence (operate as a reaction formation to, and etonement for) the primitive tendency to deetroy. Hitler has always enjoyed the painting of ruined templee (just as he has liked to contemplate the destruction of cities inhabited by his enemies); but he has likewise taken placeure in painting immense castlee (just as he has cocupied himself designing buildings for the Third Reich).

A careful study of Hitler's writings and conduct has convinced us that he is not entirely devoted to destruction, as so many claim. In his nature there is a deep valid strain of creativeness (lacking, to be sure, the necessary talent). His creativity has been engaged in combining elements for an ideology, in organizing the National Socialist Party, and in composing the allegory of his cwn life. He is the author and leading actor of a great drama.

Unlike other politicians, Hitler has conducted hie life at certain seasons as a Romantic artist does, balieving that it is the function of a nation's first statesman to furnish creative ideas, new policies, and plans.

8. Repressed Need for Paceivity and Abasement, Mesochiam .- Hitler's long-concealed secret heterosexual fantasy has been exposed by the systematic analysis and correlation of the three thousand odd metaphors he uses in Mein Kampf. The results of this study were later confirmed by the testimony of one who "claims to know". It is not necessary to describe its peculiar features here; suffice it to say that the sexual pattern has resulted from the fusion of (i) s primitive excretory solling tendency, and (ii) 'a paceive mascohistic tendency (hypertrophy of the feminine component in his make-up). The second element (masochiem) dsrives much of ite strength from an unconscioue nesd for punishment, a tendency which may be expected in one who has essiduously represed, out of swollen pride, the submiseive reactions (complience, cooperation, payment of debts, expression of gratitude, scknowledgment of srrors, apology, confession, stonement) which are required of everybody who would adaptively participate in social life. While Hitler consciously overetrives to essert his infinite euperiority, natura instinctively corrects the balance by impoeing an erotic pattern that calle for infinite self-abasement.

This erotic pattern, however, is not a strong force in Hitlsr's parsonality, nor does it comprise his entire libidinal investment. It alternates with other patterns - repressed (or as some claim overt) homosaxuslity, for example.

What is important to racognize here is that the purpose of Hitler's prolonged countersctive efforts is not solely to rise shove his humble crigins, to ovarcome his weaknesses and ineptitudes, but rather to check and conquer, by means of a vigorous idealago resction formation, an underlying positive craving for pasaivity and submission. There is no space hars for the mass of evidence bearing on this point, but s faw axamplas csn bs briefly listed: large feminina component in Hitler's physical constitution, also his feminine tastes and sensibilities; (ii) hie initial identification with his mother; (iii) his sxsggerated subservience, in the past, to masterful superiors (army officers, Ludendorff, etc.); (iv) attraction to Roehm and other domineering homosaxuals: (v) Hitlor's nightmaros which, as described by sevaral informants, are very auggestive of homosexual panio; (vi) some of Hitler's interprotations of human natura, such as when he says that the people "want somsone to frighten thom and make them shudderingly submisaive"; (vii) Hitler's repeated secertions that he intends, like Sulla, to abdicate power (after an orgy of conquest with full cathersis of his hate) and live quietly by himself, painting and decigning buildings; and finally, (viii) recurrent suicidel threats.

B.S. Ideocentricity, Dedication to the Meking of an Ideally Powerful Germany .- No true Jerman. friend or foe, has ever claimed that Hitler is not sincere in his dovction to the Prussien militerists! ideal for Germany. Thus we can sey that he has been idsocentric (dedicated to an idee) for the last twenty years. Beceuse the ides consists of a plan for a society from which the majority of his fellow countrymen will aupposedly benefit, we cen speek of him ea sociocentrio (S) alec. But since this interest in his countrymen is clserly secondary to his personal smbition - feme. immortslity - we put egocentricity (E) first: and ec write - E. S. Ideocentricity. is rere to find so much ideocentricity in e narcistic personality; but only those who are incapable of such dedication are likely to doubt the reslity of it in Hitler.

1. Insociation in Germany. Since Hitler and a large body of the German people are mutually agreable, we can apeak of him ea inacciated, eccapting and eccaptsd. It is Hitlar's intense effection for the Reich (parhaps falt to this artent only by a nationalist born outside its boundaries) that has soted es a decisive factor in (i) his winning the aupport of the people and so satisfying his will to power; (ii) giving him the facting of vocation, the sense of mission; (iii) providing moral justification (in his own mind) for many illegal acts; and (iv) keeping him relatively sane, by bringing him into association with a group of like-minded men and so delivering him from the parils of psychological isolation.

(Note. - The supposition that in Hitler's mind Germany is identified with his mother helps to axplain the fervor of his dedication.)

III. Sentiments .-

Most of Hitler's sentiments are well known and have alreedy been listed: his high valuation of Power, Glory, Dictatorehip, Nationalism, Militarism, and Brutality; and his low valuation of Waskness, Indecision, Tolerance, Compassion, Peaco, Rational Debate, Democracy, Bolshaviam, Matarialism, Capitalism, the Jewish Race, Christianity. A simplification would be that of ragarding him as the advocate of the aggressive instinct (War, Power and Glory) ve. the acquisitive instinct (Businass, Peace and Prosperity). Two quastions deserve apecial conaideration: (1) Why, when he was living as an outcast in Vianna, did Hitler not become a Communist? and (2) What is the explanation of Hitler's axtrems Anti-Semitiem?

- 1. Determinants of Hitler's Anti-Communism.
- 1. (a) Hitler's father was an upward mobils individual. Starting as a pessant, he worked his way into the lower middle class, establishing a boundary between himself and those below him.

 Both parente respected their social superiors. Thus Hitler instinctively retreated from too close associstion with the workmen of Vienna.
- 1. (b) Hitlar was too frail for construction work, was unable to hold a job, and therefore had little opportunity to become associated with a union.
- 1. (c) Having been an ardent nationalist eines the age of 12, Hitler's line of cleavage (conflict between nations) did not conform to the communicte! line of cleavage (conflict between classes).

- 1. (d) Hitler has always been an edvocate of the hierarchical principle: government by the fittest, rigorously trained and proved in action. The ideal of Communism, on the other hand, calls for a wide distribution of power among these untrained to rule.
 - 1. (e) Hitler's sentiments have been with militarism from sarlisst youth. The materielism of Communism never appealed to him.
 - (f) Laoking sympethy for the underdog, the humanitarian aspect of Communism did not attract him. Hitler has always been a bully.
 - 2. Determinants of Hitler's Anti-Semitiam.
 - 2. (a) The influence of wide-spread Anti-Semitio sentiments (represented especially by such men es Lueger and Feder), traditional in Germany.
 - 2. (b) Hitler's parsonal frustrations required a scapegoat as focus for his repressed aggression. The Jew is the classic scapegoat because he does not fight back with fists and weapone.
 - 2. (c) The Jsw wss sn object upon whom Hitler could suitably project his own inferior self (his sensitiveness, weakness, timidity, masochistic sexuality).

- 2. (d) After the Verseilles Treaty the German people also needed a scapegoat. Hitler offered them the Jewieh race as an sot of political atrategy.
- 2. (e) Having assembled s veritable army of gangaters (Nazi troopers) and aroused their fighting spirit, it was necessary for Hitler to find some object upon whom these men could vent their brutish passione, to canalize anger away from himself.
- 2. (f) Jews, being non-militaristic, could only impede his program on conquest. In eliminating them he lost no sizesble support.
- 2. (g) Jews were associated with sevaral of Hitler's pet antipathies: business, materialism, democracy, capitalism, communism.
- 2. (h) Some Jews were vary rich and Hitler needed an excuse for disposaeasing them.
- IV. Formal Structure, Hysteria, Schizophrenia .-

Hitler has a relatively weak character (ego structure); his great strength comes from an emotional complex which drives him periodically.

Usually he can not voluntarily force himself to stick to a routine of work; he must be compelled from inside, lifted on a wave of pession. His id (instinctual forces) and ego (voluntary control) are in leegue; his superago (conscience) is repressed.

l. Hysteria. - Hitler has exhibited various forms of hysterical dissociation, most notably in the two symptoms which constituted his war neurosis in 1918, namely blindness and aphonia (mutism). He experiences periods of marked abstraction, violent emotional outburats, visions of hallucinatory clarity. In speaking before crowds he is virtually possessed. He clearly belongs to the sensational company of history-making hysterics, combining, as he does, some of the attributes of the primitive shaman, the religious visionary, and the orack-brained demagogue - consummate actors, one and all.

It is important to note, however, that Hitler has a large measure of control over his complexes.

He uses an emotional outburst to get his own way, turning it on or off as the occasion requires. As Erikson says, he "knows how to exploit his hysteria... On the stage of German history, Hitler senses to what extent it is sefs and expedient to let his own paraonelity represent with hysterical abandon what lives in every German listaner and reader."

2. Sohizophrania. Peychiatrists are not unfamiliar with borderline stetes lying between hysteria and schizophrania. In some cases the former develops into the latter (a serious variety of insanity).

Since Hitler, as noted above, has exhibited all the symptoms of paranoid sohizophrenia, the possibility of a complete mental breakdown is not remote.

Here again, however, it should be observed that paranoid dynamics can be used very effectively in rousing and focussing the forces of a minority party or of a defastad nation. The stretegy coneists chiefly in (i) painting vivid and exaggereted word-pictures of the orimes and trescherous evil purposee of your powerful opponents (dslusions of paraecution); (ii) persuading your own group of ite innate superiority and glorious destiny (delucions of grandeur); (iii) subduing conscience by asserting that your common end justifies the msane, that your opponents have used the most destardly means in the past; end (iv) blaming your onemies for every frustration, every disastor that occurs. In consciously employing these tactios Hitler has exploited his own poranoid trends and retained some governance over them.

Thus the snewer to the question, How has Hitler escaped veritable insanity? might be thie: (1) he has gained a large moosure of control over his hysterical and personal trends by using them consciously and successfully in the achisvement of his aims; (ii) ha has identified himself with and dedicated himself to a sociocentric purposa, the crestion of an ideal Germany, which has served to diminish the pains and perils of an isolated egocentriam; and (iii) he has bach supramaly successful in imposing his visions and delusions (conforming, as they did, with existent trends) upon the German peopla, and so convincing them of his unparallelad auperiority. Thus his irreal world has become real, insanity is sanity.

- V. 1. Abilities and Affective Traits. Hitler's suddes has depended to a large extent upon his own peculiar abilities and traits:
 - 1. (a) The ability to express with passion the deepest needs and longings of the people.
 - 1. (b) The ability to appeal to the most primitive as well as to the most ideal tendencies in man.
 - 1. (c) The ability to aimplify complax problems and arrive at the quickast solution;
 - (d) The ability to use metaphor and draw on traditional imagery and myth in speaking and writing.

- 1. (a) The sbility to evoke the sympethy snd protectiveness of his people.

 The leader's welfare becomes a matter of concern to them.
- 1; (f) Complate dadiostion to his mission; abundant self-confidence; and stubborn adherence to a few principles.
- 1. (g) Mastery of the srt of political organization.
- 1. (h) Tactical genius; pracise timing.
- 1. (1) Mastery of the art of propagands.
- 2. Principles of Political Action. -

Among the guiding principles of Hitler's political philosphy the following are worth lieting:

- 2. (s) Success depends on winning the support of the masses.
- 2. (b) The leader of a new movement must speed to youth.
- 2. (o) The masses need a custsining ideology; it is the function of the leader to provide one.
- 2. (d) Paople do not act if their emotions are not roused.
- 2. (e) Artistry and drsma are necessary to the total effect of political rallies and meetings.

- 2. (f) The leading atatesman must be a creator of ideas and plans.
- 2. (g) Success justifies any means.
- 2. (h) A new movement can not triumph without the effective use of terroristic methods

B. Predictions of Hitler's Behavior

Whatever else happens it can be confidently predicted that Hitler's neurotic epells will increase in frequency and duration and his effectiveness as a leader will diminish: responsibility will fall to a greater or less extent on other shoulders. Indeed there is some evidence that his mental powere have been deteriorating since last November, 1942. Only once or twice has he appeared before his people to enlighten or encourage them. Aside from the increase in neurotic symptoms the following things might heppen:

Military Command or by some revolutionary faction in Germany and be immured in some prison fortrees.

This event is hard to envisage in view of what we know of the widespread reverence for the man and the protection that is afforded him. But if this were to occur the myth of the invincible hero would end rather ignominiously, end Hitler should eventually be delivered into our hands. The General Staff will no doubt become the rulers of Germany if Hitlsr's mental condition deteriorates much further (Option #5).

- 2. Hitler may be shot by some Garman. The man has feered this eventuality for many years and today he is protected as never before. Germans are not inclined to shoot their leaders. This is possible but not very likely.
- some German, perhaps by a Jew. This would complete the myth of the hero daath at the hand of some trusted follower: Siegfried stabbed in the back by Hagen, Caesar by Brutus, Christ batrayed by Judas. It might increase the fanaticism of the coldisrs for a while and creete a legend in conformity with the encient pettern. If Hitler could arrange to have a Jaw, some perencid like himself, kill him, then Ha could die in the belief that his fellow countrymen would rise in their wrath and massacre avery remaining Jew in Germany. Thus he might try to indulge his insatisble ravengefulness for the last time.
- 4. Hitler may get himself killed leading his elite troops in battle. Thus he would live on ee e here in the hearts of his countrymen. It is not unlikely that he will choose this course, which would be very undesirable from our point of view, first because his deeth would serve as an exemple to all his followers to fight with fanational death-defying energy to the bitter end, and second, because it would insure Hitler's immortality - the Siegfried who led the Aryan hosts against Bolshevism and the Slav.

This is one of Hitler's favorite posee.

- the verge of parancid schizophrenia for years and with the mounting load of frustration and failure he may yield his will to the turbulent forces of the unconscious. This would not be undesirable from our standpoint, because, even if the fact were hidden from the people, morals would rapidly deteriorate as rumora epread, and the legend of the hero would be severely damaged by the cutcome. If Hitler became insane, he should oventually fall into the hande of the Allied Nations.
- s. Hitler may commit suicide. Hitler has often vowed that he would commit suicide if his plans miscarried; but if he chooses this course he will do it at the last moment and in the most dramatic possible menner. He will retreat, let ue say, to the impregnable little refuge that was built for him on the tep of the mountain behind the Berghof (Berchtesgaden).

There slone he will wait until treeps come to take him prisoner. As a grand climax he will either (i) blow up the mountain and himself with dynamite; or (ii) make a funeral pyre of his dwelling and throw himself on it (a fitting Götterdämmerung; or (iii) kill himself with a silver bullet (Emperor Christopho); er (iv) throw himself off the perapet. This outcome, undesirable for us, is not at all unlikely.

- 7. Hitler mey die of natural oauses .-
- 8. Hitler may seek refuge in a neutral country.—
 This is not likely, but one of his associates might drug him and take him to Switzerland in a plane and then persuade him that he should stay there to write his long-planned Bible for the German folk. Since the Hero's descrition of his people would seriously damage the legend, this outcome would be more desirable than some of the other pessibilities.
- 9. Hitler may fell into the hande of the United Neticne. This is perhaps the least likely, but the most desirable, outcome.

In making these predictions we have been sweyed most by the supposition that Hitler's chief concern is the immortality of his legend and consequently he will endeavor to plan his own and according to the most heroic, tragic and dramatic pattern.

Options #5 (insanity to some extant) and #3 (dramatic suicide), or #4 (death at the front), atrike us as most probable today.

Propagands measures should, if pessible, be devised to prevent #4 and #5.

- C. Suggestions for the Treetment of Hitler
- taken into oustody by the United Nations.— Any end of the conventional punishments a triel followed by execution, by life imprisonment or by exile will provide a tregio ending for the drama of Eitler's sensational career; and thus centribute the element that is necessary to the resurrection and perpetuation of the Hitlerian legend. That can the Allies do that will spoil the tragedy end thus kill the legend?

 As an answer to this question, the following plan is suggested. It should work if preperly executed.

- 1. (a) Bring the Nazi leaders to trisl; condemn the chief culprite the desth, but proclaim Hitler mentally unbalanced.
- 1. (b) Commit Hitler to an insane asylum (euch as St. Elizabeth's, Washington, D. C.) and house him in a comfortable dwelling specially built for his occupancy. Let the werld know that he is being well troated.
- 1. (c) Appoint a committee of psychiatriata end psychologists to examine him and test his faculties at regular intervels. Unknown to him, have coundfilms taken of his behavior. They will show his fits and tirades and condemnetions of everyone in the world, including the German people.
- of the entire world selected segments of these soundreels, so that it can be seen how unbalanced he is,
 how mediocre his performance on the customary tests.

 If taken in a routina, scientific and undramatic manner the pictures will become quite tiresome after a while and the people will get bored with Hitler in a year or so. (Trust science to take the drama out of anything.)
- 1. (a) Hitler's case should be presented to the world as a lesson: "This is what happens to oreck-brained fanetics who try to dominete the world."

As such it could serve as a powerful deterrent to others with fantesies of world domination.

- 1. (f) A thorough study of Hitler's personality would be of considerable importance to psychietry; and the publication of a cerefully documented book on the subject would not only act as a deterrent (published in popular form) to future would-be Hitlere, but would be a significent contribution to soience.
 - 2. Between Now end the Coesetion of Hostilities. The eim should be either (i) to accolorate Hitler's mental deterioration, to drive him insone; or (ii) to prevent him from insuring the perpetuation of his legond by ending his life drematically and tregically.

There ere verious peychological techniques ovaileble for eccelorating Hitler's nervous breakdown, but they will not be considered here. None could be so certainly effective as reposted military setbacks.

We shall limit ourselve to a few measures which might serve (2. (c)) to deter Hitler from arrenging e hare's or a martyr's doeth for himself, and (2. (b)) to make him believe that the immortality of his logend will not suffer if he fells into the hands of the United Netions.

Flood Germany with communications 2. (a) (leaflets, short-wave, long-wove, official speeches, underground transmission from Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey) telling the people that Hitler can not be trueted, that he is planning (quoting Hese, Strosser, Hanfstaengel, Rauschning and other Nazis in England and America) to leeve them treacherously to their fate by getting himself killed. This will be a sly trick of his to insure his own prestige and future fome. He does not care for the German people; he cares only for his own glory. He is no better than a seccaptain who quits his ship, leoving his crew to drown. Drop vivid cortoone of Hitler rushing ludiorously forward to his death on the Russian front (out of a guilty conscience over the noble Gormans he has condemned to dis there for his glory); osrtoons of his arranging to have himself shot, and others of his committing suicide. Interpret this os the easy way out. a cowardly betreyal of his people, the act of a bad conscience, the quintessence of vonity. Warn the people sgoinet him, tho felso prophet, the Judos Iscoriot of the German Revolution, etoetoro. If hundrods of these leaflets, pemphlots, streamers are dropped over Berchtesgeden, the ohences are that some of them will foll in places where Hitler himself is likely to come on them. He is very ausceptible to ridicule, and if the cortoons are claver enough to make suicide easm cowardly, grotasque, or ridiculous, it may be enough to deter him. Prediction will spoil the startling effect.

Flood Germany with another series 2. (b) of communications in which the people are told that the Nazi lesders who led them into this dieaetrous war are going to be executed - ell except Hitler, who will be exiled to Seint Helens where he can brood over his sins for the rest of his life. Write os if we thought that this was the most terrible of all punishments. But actually this idea should appeal to Hitler, who greatly admires Nepoleon and knowe that the Napoleonic legend wee fostered by the man's last years at Seint Helens. This treetment would be better than eny he could new be hoping to receive from his enemics. It might positively ettrect him. He would imagine himself painting londscapes, writing his new Bible, and making plans for on even greater German redvolution to be carried out in his nomo thirty yeare hence, by the repeated and not too obvious use of theee two messages Hitler would be faced by a conflict between (1) a celf-annihilation which might be interpreted as a cowardly betreyal, end (2) a peaceful old age at Saint Helena. He might choose the latter and so allow himself to be taken by the Allies. Only later would be discover that there was to be no Saint Helena for him. This trick of ours is justified by the necessity of preventing the resurrection of the memory of Hitler as a superman to rouse future generations of criminals and revolutionaries.

D. Suggestions for the Treatment of the German Feople

Hastening the Breakdown of Germany's Faith in Hitler. The German people have put their whole truet in Hitler. He is their man, as no militery commander representing a special class could be their man. Having taken the entire reeponsibility for the conduct of effairs, he has become their conecience and so relieved them temporarily of guilt. The pride-eystem and security-eystem of each individual German is thus based on Hitler's genius and success. The bulk of the people will not easily be persueded of hie incompetence and falsenees. They will cling as long as possible to the illusion of his omniscience because without this thay have nothing. When it comes, the disenchantment will be sudden and catastrophic to German morele generally.

The Allies can rely on the march of physical avents to bring about the sventual disenchantment of the Garman people; but since events will march faster and the war will end sooner if this disenchantment can be hastened by other means, the Allias should not overlook the power of words to change sentiments and attitudes. The following suggestions may prove of some value.

effective method would be that of printing leaflets containing the names, rank and regiments of German soldiers recently taken prisoner. The Gestapo could hardly succeed in praventing anxious parents from picking up these leaflets to obtain the latest news of their sone at the front. Communications of this sort might start somewhat as follows: NEWS FROM THE FRONT. Among the 20,000 German coldiers who surrendered to the World Army in Sicily the following were happy at the prospect of going to America, the land of free epeech and from action: Corp. Hane Schmidt, Cept.

Heinrich Wittels, etc. etc. "Why are you laughing?"

they were asked. "Because," they enswered, "we ere going to the United States; whereas you are going to the lend of the False Prophet and the Gestspo!"

etc., etc.

we suggest that NEWS FROM THE FRONT be distributed et reguler weekly intervals, like a newspaper; in order that the Germane will learn to expect it and look forward to it, since it will contain news that they can not obtain in any other wey.

Mixed in with the liete of German prisoners could be printed the messeges that we wish to impert to the people.

1. (b) Nome for Hitler. In the minds of many Germans the word "Hitler" is still surrounded by a layer of reverential foelings which protect his image from etteck. Therefore it would be better not to refer to him (except occasionally) by name. Much more subtly offective would be the use of another term; False Prophet or Felso Massiah. Later more derogatory terms - the Amateur Stratogiet, Corporal Saton, World Criminal No. 1 - might be offective.

1. (c) Substitution of a Higher Symbol. * The German character-structure is marked by a strong need to worship, obey, and scorifice. When this can be fecussed on some entity + God, the Absolute, the: German State, the Fuehrer - they are happy and healthy. Consequently, it will be easier to breek their present allegiance to Hitler if a satisfectory substitute is presented. The Germans will not readily accept a value that is identified in their minde with the special preferences of an enemy-nation (Democracy. eto.); it must be something higher, something suprsnational that will excite the respect of all peoples alika. There is a great nood now, rather thon later, for some form of World Federation. But lacking this, the Allies in their message to Germany, should use terms that suggest its spirit. Against Hitler, the Fales Prophet, the propagandists should speak of the World Conecience (the neme of God cen not be used without hypocriey), and should speek of the forces of Ruseia, Groet Britsin, France, and the Americas as the World Army. (N.B. Suggestion for ane leaflet: Quostion: Who has seduced the German peoplo from their true path? Who has turned their hearts against the Conscience of the World? Who is responsible this time for Germany's oncirclement by the World Army? L To be offective the terme "World Conscience" and "World Army" must be repeated frequently. "world Police Force" might also be used.

REPRODUCED AT THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

- 1. (d) A collection should be made of passages from the first unexpurgated edition of Mein Kampf damonstrating Mitler's cynical contempt of the Masses. Each NEWS FROM THE FRONT should end with one of these quotations.
- Mussolini. Mussolini provided the model for the development of the Next Party and Mitter publicly expressed his admiration for the Italian leader. (His words on this point should be reprinted.) Mussolini's fall will do much to undermine German morale, and no opportunity should be missed to stress the connection between Hitler's destiny and Museolini's defeat the Decline and Fall of the Unhely Alliance.
- 1. (f) The Conception of Destiny. *

 Germans bolieve in predestination (the wave of the future), and all communications addressed to them should be written as if the defeat of the False Prophet word a foregone conclusion. Some messages should dome from the 'Voice of Hietory'.
 - 1. (g) Taking Advantage of Hitler's

Waning Powers. - Hitler's precise stetus and role in German politics at this moment is not definitely known; but the decreasing frequency of his appearances is probably due to a growing incepacity to fulfill his former function. His montal state is evidently deteriorating. This should be assumed in talking to the German people. For example: "Now that Musselini has collapsed and Hitlsr is in the hands of mental specialists, what has become of the Spirit of Fascism?" or "Do you still believe that a man whose sanity has been completely undermined by Guilt can lead the German people to victory against the World?"

The Nazi regime should be constantly coupled with Japan in an ironical or satirical manner. For example: "The Nazis and their blood-brothers, the Japanese, have both demonstrated their willingness to die for Saten - this summer one million of them have thrown away their lives in a futile attempt to destroy civilization." "Who is responsible for this ignoble league of Germany and Japan against the Conscience of the World?" "A fact to be explained: Germans are dying every day fighting with Japanese against German-Americans. Why is that? Who is responsible."

- 1. (1) Munich Student Manifeato. In planning messages to Germany hints for one line of propaganda can be obtained from the revolutionary manifeate distributed last year by students at the University of Munich.
 - 2. Pesse Terms, Trial of Wer Criminals . -
- that Ritler; or the leader of the Mazi Perty, be the one to surrender and sign the peace treaty.

 The Allies should insist on this, should dreg the gangatere without ceremony from their hiding places end force them to eign. (A little trickery at this point would be justified.) The terms should be severe at first. Later when a more representative government has been established the terms can be made more lenient. Thus in the future the dictators will be recalled in connection with the humiliation of unconditional surrender; whereas the democratic government will get the credit of eccuring milder terms.
- 2. (b) A World Court, at least one member of which is a Swiss and one a Swede, should immediately publish a list of war criminals, as complete as possible, and neutral countries should be officially werned that no man on this list must be given sentuary.

The Allies should be prepared to invade any country that harbors a world criminal.

2. (c) The trial of the war criminels should be carried out with the utmost despatch. It must not be allowed to drag on for months, as this would give the Germans a convincing impression of our moral weakness and incompetence, and postpone their regeneration. In connection with the trial a short readable book should be published in German explaining the nature of international law (the brotherhood of nations) and exposing the crimes committed by the Fascists in A.B.C. language.

A pamphlet comparing the terms of the Veresilles Treaty with Germany's method of dealing with conquered countries should be given wide circulation.

3. Treatment of the German People after the Cessation of Hoetilities. -

It is assumed that Germany will be invaded and occupied by Allied forces, that simultaneously there will be uprisings of slave labor and of civiliane in occupied territories; that much German blood will be spilled. This is so it should be - a fitting Nemesia. The Allied troops will march in and eventually rectore order. This function of rectoring order will make their presence more acceptable to the Germans.

people profoundly humiliated, resentful, disenchanted, dejected, morbse, despairing of the future. Accustomed to obeying an arbitrary external authority, they will have no dependable inner guides to control behavior. There will be a wave of crime and suicide. Apathy will be wide-apread. Having passed through a period of intense unanimity and cooperation, Germany as a social system will fall apart, each man to suffer pain and mortification in private.

Disorganization and confusion will be general, oresting a breeding ground for cults of extreme individualism. A considerable part of the population will be weighed down by a heavy sense of guilt, which should lead to a revival of religion. The soil will be laid for a spiritual regeneration; and perhaps the Germans, not we, will inherit the future.

Germany, will insist on efficient guarantees against future conspiracies, will take steps to liquidate the Junker Class, will prevent rearmament and the mieuse of raw materials. As Dr. Foerster has said:

'a' soft paece for Germany will be a very hard peace for the German people, delivering them to the Prussian caste who led them estray.'

Nothing permanent, however, can be achieved by such measures slone. What is required is a profound conversion of Germany's attitude: abandonment of the idea (1) that they are innately superior; (2) that they are destined to govern the earth; (3) that there is no human law or authority higher than the good of the German State; (4) that power is to be admired above everything; and (5) that Might makes Right.

realize that we are dealing with a nation suffering from parancid trends: delusions of grandour; delusions of persecution; profound hatred of strong apponents and contempt of weak opposents; errogance, suspiciousness and envy - all of which has been built up as a reaction to an age-old inferiority complex and a desire to be appreciated.

Possibly the first four steps in the treatment of a single parameted personality can be adapted to the conversion of Germany. In attempting this we must not forget that the source of their psychic sickness is wounded pride.

- 5.(a) First Step. The physician must gain the respect of the patient.
- (1) Individual paranoid. Paranoids can not be treated successfully if they are not impressed (consciously or unconsciously) by the ability, knowledge, wisdom, or perhaps mere magnetic force, of the physician. Special efforts must sometimes be made to eshieve this end, since paramoids, being full of scorn, are not easy to impress.

occupy Germany should be the finest that the United Nations can assemble - regiments with a history of victories, composed of tall well-disciplined soldiers commanded by the best generals. Rowdiness and drunkenness should not be parmitted. The Germans should be compelled to admit: "These are splendid men, not the weak degenerates (democratic soldiers) or barberians (Russian soldiers) we were led to expect." The Germans edmire orderlinoss, precision, afficiency.

- 3. (b) Second Stap. The potential worth of the patient should be fully acknowledged.
- dwelling burning hunger of the paranoid is for recognition, power and glory praise from those whom he respects. This hunger should be appeared as soon as possible, so that the paranoid thinks to himself:
 "The great man appreciates me. Together we can face the world." It is as if he thought: "He is God the Father and I am his chosen son."

dide, its music, historic culturs and manuments of beauty should be appreciated and praised. The army of occupation should manifest intense interest in the culture of Old Germany and complete indifference to all recent developments. The troops should be instructed and coached by lectures and guide-books covering the district they will occupy. They should be told that the war is not won until the heart of the German people has been won.

dormans of the old school should be hired to teach the German language, to guido the soldiers on tours of the country and of muscums, to teach native arts and skills. Concerts should be arranged, omitting pieces that have been specially favored by the Nazis. Editions of books burned by the Nazis should be published and put on sale immediately.

All this will serve a double purpose. It will provide education for our troops and occupy their time; thus helping to maintain morale. Also the submerged inferiority feelings and resentments of the Germans will be alleviated.

REPRODUCED AT THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

- 3 (c) Third Stop. Insight should be teetfully provided, s little st a time.
- gredually, stop by stsp, the patient is enlightened as to hie own paranoid mechanisms. Pride in being uncriticizable and always in the right must be gradually replaced by pride in being able to rise above his own mechanisms and criticize himself, pride in being strong enough to admit come weaknesses and erros. He should be made to understand that he has been victimized by unconectous forces which gained control over his proper self. During the course of these talks the physician should freely confess his own weaknesses and errors, the patient being treeted es en equal.
- (ii) Gormany. The leet ten years of German history should be interpreted as a violent infactious fever, a possession of the spirit, which took hold of the people as soon as they gave ear to the false prophets of Faccism.

A series of articles, editorials, essays and short books should be written now by Germans in this country (Thomas Mann, Reinheld Niebuhr, Foerster, and others), sided possibly by suggestions from psychiatriats, to be published in German newspapers and distributed essays ossentially - perhaps signed by a nom de plume as if written by a minister, physician, or writer in Germany.

Not too much should be said in any one paper; but, in time, the lies, delusions, treecheries and crimes of the Nazia should be reviewed objectively in historical sequence. The German people should be made to understand that the world regards them as unwitting and unhappy victims of instinctual forces. The Allies should be magnenimous enough to admit their own errors and misdeeds.

- 3. (a) Fourth Step. The petient should be insociated in a group.
- attained a measure of satisfaction by winning the respect and friendship of his physician and then having gained some insight and control, the petient is ready for group therapy. Leter, he can be persuaded to join outside groups. Gradually he must learn to take his place and cooperate on an equal basis with others. The group he joins should have a goal.

Germany .- If Germany is to (11)be converted, it is of the utmost importance that some strong and efficient super-government be estabiled liahed as soon as poseible, providing a new world consoience, that her people can respect. As said above, Germana must have aomething to look up to - s God, a Fuehrer, an Absolute, a nstional ideal. not be a rival nation, or a temporary slliance of nationa. It must be s body - a strong body with e police force - which stande above any aingle state. A supranationol symbol would eventually attract the defarence that ie now foouasad upon Hitlar. Lacking such a symbol, many Germans will cartainly fall into e state of profound disillusionment and despair. At the proper time Germany abould be inacciated as an oqual in whataver leagua or faderation of nations has been eatablished.

From here on the therapy of a single paranoid paraonality feils as an analogy, principally because the German people will not be in the position of a patient who cames willingly to the physician's office. The Nazia will be in no mood to be educated by their enomies. Furthermore it would be very prosumptuous of us to try it. The most that the Allies could do would be to close all echools and universities until new anti-fescist teachere and feculties had been recruited. The greatest problem will be in dealing with a whole generation of brutelized and hardsned young Nazis. (Perhaps exhibition games of eccer, football, lacrosse and baseball between American and English regiments would serve to introduce idess of fair play and eportement; but much else must be done - by German educatore.)

For the conversion of Germany the most effective agency will be some form of world federation. Without this the Allied victory will have no permanently important consequences.

SECTION II

Hitler the Man -- Notes for a Case History

ρÀ

W. H. D. Vernon

HITLER THE MAN -- NOTES FOR A CASE HISTORY

by

W. H. D. Vernon

Harvard University

The purpose of this paper is to bring together in brief form what is known about Adolf Hitler as a man. For if allied strategists could peer "incide Hitler" end edapt their strategy to what they find there, it is likely that the winning of the war would be speeded. It must be admitted, to bagin with, that the intricacies of so complex a personality would ba difficult enough to unravel were the subject present and cooperating in the task. But there are two further difficulties to be faced. One must attempt both to select out of the great mass of material which has been written about Mitler that which appears to be objective reporting and than further to reconstruct hie paraonelity on the basia of this very inadequate psychological data. We have, of course, as primary acurce material, Hitler's own writings and spesches and these tell us a good deal. Though we must admit. therefore, at ite baginning that the nature of our analysis is very tentative and that in many instances only imperfect proof can be given for the inferences which are drawn, it is no more tentetive than the psychological pen pictures which the Nazis themselves have found so useful (3).

55 -

HITLER'S ORIGINS AND EARLY LIFE

In any case etudy one must begin by asking who the subject is, whence he came, who were his forboars. Heiden (8) presents the most reliable genealogy available. Here we note only certain important points.

Hitler's father, Alois, was born the illegitimate son of Maria Anna Schickigruber in 1837 in the village of Spitel. He was supposed to be the eon of Johann Georg Hiedler. However, to his fortieth year, Alois bore the name of hie mother Schickigruber. Only then, when Georg Hiedler was (if still alive)² eighty-five years of age, and thirty-five years after the desth of his mother, did he take the name Hitler, the meiden name of his mother-in-law. As Heiden says, "In the life history of Adolf Hitler no mention is ever made of the grandparents on his father's side.

l Jenuary 5, 1877

² There seems to be no record of his death.

· + 55 -

The details invariably refer only to his mother's relations. There are many things to suggest that Adolf Hitler's grandfather was not Johann Georg Hiedler, but an unknown man" (8, 8). The encestors on both sides of the family were peasent people of the district of Waldviertel, highly illiterate and very inbred (5: 8).

Alois Hitler, at first a cobbler, had by the oge of forty achieved the position of an Austrian oustoms official. The aducation for this position was the contribution of his first wife, Anna Glasl, who, fifteen years his senior, died in 1883. His second wife, whom he married aix weeks later, died in a year, and three months later, on January 7, 1885 (5), he married Klara Poelsl, a distant cousin.

In appearance Heiden has compared Alois to Hindenburg (8). Gunther (5) describes his picturs as showing a big. round, heirless skull; smell, sharp, wicked eyes; big bicyclo-handls moustochios; ond heavy chin. He was a hersh, stern, ambitious, ond punctilious man (5; 8).

Alois wife, Klaro, is described (5) as being a tall, nervous young woman, not as strong as most peasant stock, who ran off to Vienna as a girl to return after ten years (a daring escapada for one in her escal status). Her doctor (1) describes her in her early forties as tall, with brownish heir nestly plaited, a long ovel face and besutifully expressive gray blue eyes. A simple, modest, kindly woman.

adolf Hitler, born in 1889, as far se can be escertained was alois' fifth child, the third of his own mother but the first to live more than two years. This it would seem was a large fector in channelling the great effection for Adolf which all the evidence seems to show she bore him. In return, Adolf, who feared and opposed his father -- as he himself admits -- geve all his affection to his mother, and when she died of cencer in 1908 he was prostreted with grisf (8; 9; 1).

Adolf se e boy and youth was somewhat tell, sallow and old for hie ege, with large melancholy thoughtful syee. He was neither robust nor sickly, and with but the usual infrequent ailments of a common and natural balles (9) but his doctor says

Heiden points out that the uncertsin details of Hitler's femily have had to be collected from strsy publications, that Hitler is reticent to the point of erousing suspicion, about his life story (8).

Alois' children were Alois, 1882 (son by first wife); Angela, 1883 (deughter by second wife); Gustsv, 1885-1887; s daughter, 1886-1888; Adolf, 1889; Edmund, 1894-1900; Paule, 1895 or 1896 (children by third wife).

"De" (1). His recreations were such as were free -welks in the mountains, swimming in the Denube, and reading Fenimore Cooper and Karl May. A quiet, well-mennered youth who lived with himsels.

About Adolf's early education we know little except what he himself talls us -- that he early wented to be an artist; that this outraged his father, who sternly determined to make a good civil servant of him; that there was a perpetual atruggle between the two, with his mother siding with Adolf and finally sending him off to Vienna to complete his art education when his father died. Except for history and geography which cought his imagination he neglected his studies, to find in Vienna, when he feiled his art exemination, that his lack of formal education was a barrier to entering the architectural school.

At the age of nineteen, whon his mother died, he went to Vienna to spend there throe lonely and miserable years, living in "flop-houses" (7), eking out a living by begging, shoveling snow, peddling his own postoards, working as a hod-carrier or casual laborer of any sort. Here his ideas began to crystallise, his anti-Semitism and enti-Slavism, his anti-ideas of all sorts. In 1912 he went to Munich and there as "water-color artist, picture postcard painter, technical draftsman and occasional house-pointer mitler managed to earn some sort of a living" (8, 25). In 1914 he enlisted in the ermy with great anthusiaem, performed his duties with distinction and bravery, was wounded, sent home to recover, and in March, 1917, was back at the front. He was aloof from comredee, zealous in his duty, and very lonsly. Through all the war he received no letter or parcel (8).

⁵ A German author of Indian storios.

⁵ This in contrast to Hitler's own occount of himsolf as o bit of a young tough (9).

- 59 -

The war over and with no home to go to, Hitler in 1919 was appointed an eapionaga agent of the insurgent Reichawehr which had just put down the Soviet Rapublic in Munich. Shortly thereafter ha came in contoct with Anton Drexler and what was to become leter the Nazi party had its beginning. Further than this it is not necessary to follow Hitler's political history. It is too well known and the basic structure of his personality was already formed. Letsr years have only brought to fruition letent tendencies end laid the final product open for the world to wonder et. We must now turn to a closer examination of this structure.

⁷ Militery awards wara: Ragimental Diploma for Conspicuous Bravary, Military Cross for Distinguished Service, Third Close, The Black Woundad Badga, and The Iron Cross, First Class (8).

HITLER'S PERSONAL APPEARANCE AND MANNER

Portreits or moving pictures of Hitler are common onough, yet it is well to draw ettention to various eapeots of his physique. To most non-Nazia Hitler has no porticular ettraction. He resembles o ecoondrete weiter. He is a smallish man, elightly under average height. His forehead is slightly receding and his nose somewhat incongregue with the rast of his face. The latter is somewhat soft, his lips thin, and the whole fees expressionless. The eyes are a neutral grey which tend to take on the color. of their momentery surroundings,8 The look tends to bs etaring or dead and locking in sperkle. There is an essentially feminine quality about his person which is portrayed particularly in his strikingly. wall-shaped and expressive hands (2; 8; 13; et al.).

Hitler's manner is essentially ewkward and all his movements jerky except perhaps the gestures of

SThis fact has caused an amazing number of differentdescriptions of his actual eye color.

hie hands. He oppears shy and ill et ease in company end eeems coldom capable of carrying on conversation. Usually he declaims while his associates lieten. He often seems listless and moody. This is in marked contract to the drematic energy of hie speechee and his skillful ploy upon the emotions of hie veet sudiences, every changing mood of which he eppeare to percoive and to turn to his own purposes. At times he is conciliatory, at other times he may buret into violent temper tentrums if his whims ere checked in any way (16).

ATTITUDES, TRAITS, AND NEEDS CHARACTERISTIC OF HITLER

Attitude toward Neture, Fete, Religion. - Firet and leet words are often significent. Mein Kampf bogins with a centiment of gratitude to Fate, and almost its last peragraph appeals for vindication to the Goddess of History. However, ell through the book there are references to Eternel Nature, Providence, end Destiny. "Therefore, I believe today I am ecting in the cense of the Almighty creator: by warding off the Jews I am fighting for the Lord's work" (9, 84). This feeling of being directed by great forces outside one, of doing the Lord's work, is the essence of the feeling of the religious mystic.

No matter how pagan Hitler's othical and social ideas may be, they have a quality comparable to religious experience. Moreover, all through his sots end words, both spoken and written, is this extreme exaggeration of his own self-importance -- he truly feels his divine mission (16), even to the point of foreseing a mertyr's death (16).

As far as authorized religion is concerned,

Hitler recognized both its strength and weaknesses

(9; 12) and adopted freely whatever he found service abla for hie own ends. That he strikes down Protestant and Catholic alike is due merely to the conviction that these religions are but old husks and must give way to the new (9).

Toword conscience his attitude is a dual one.

One the one hand he repudiatee it as an ethical guide, heaping contempt on it as a Jewish invention, o blemich like circumcicion (16). He scorns as fools those who obey it (16). But in matters of oction he waits upon his inner voice, "Unless I have the inner incorruptible conviction, this is the solution, I do nothing... I will not act, I will wait no matter what happens. But if the voice speaks, then I know the time has come to act (13, 181).

Like Socrates he listens to his Daimon.

Hitler's Attitude toward Power and His Need for Aggression. - To the German people and the world at large, Hitlsr spears as a man of tremendous strangth of will, determination, and powor. Yet these who are or have been close to him (e.g., 16) know that he is conecious of boing powsrful and improeses others as auch only at certoin times. Whon he is declaiming to o great throng or when he is on one of his solitory walks through the mountaino, then Hitler is conecious of his destiny as one of the great and powerful of the sges. But in between these periods he feels humilieted and woak. At such times he is irritated and unable to do or docide anything. is thsee feelings of his own weakness that no doubt have determined to a great extent his ideas on the education of youth. All weakness must be knocked out of the new German youth, they must be indifferent to pain, have no fear of dooth, must learn the art of sslf-command; for only in this way can they become creative Godmen (15). Hitler's feelings of weekness and power probably elso detarming his attitudes towards psoples ond nations. For those who are wesk, or for aome reason do not display power, he has only contempt.

^{9 &}quot;My great political opportunity lies in my deliberate use of power at a time when there are still illusions abroad as to the forces that mould history" (16, 271).

For those who are strong he has feelinge of respect. fear, submissiveness (4: 9: 16). For the Britain of the great wer period he had great respect (9). but only contempt for the powerless Indian revolutioneries who tried to oppose British imperial power (9).10 For the macees over whom he has sway he feels only contempt. He compares them to a woman who prefers to submit to the will of comeone stronger (9). He harangues the crowd at night whon they are tired and lese registant to the will of another (9). He uses every psychological trick to break the will of an audience. He makes use of all the conditions which make in the German people for a longing for submission. their anxieties, their feelings of lonelinese (9). He understands hie subjects because they are so like himeelf (4).

closely related to his attitude towerd power, and one of the basic elements of Hitler's personality structure, is a deep-lying need for aggression, destruction, brutality. It was with him in phentasy at least in childhood (9). And there is evidence of it from his doys in Vienno (7). We know too (9) that the outbreek of the first great war was o tremendously thrilling experience for him. Since the war we have eeen his adoption of eo-colled "communist" methods of dealing with heaklers (9), the murder of his close friends, his brutolity toward the Jewe, his destruction of one small nation after another, and his more recent major war ogainst the rest of the world. But this element of his personality is so patent that it herdly useds documenting.

By the interesting to note that the war against By the man appears only to have broken out because Hitler was convinced that she would not and could not regist the strength of the German armed forces.

Hitler's attitude toward the Jows end toward Race . - Apsi-Semitism is not on uncommon thing and Burope has a long history of it but, as has been pointed out, "in the case of Hitlor, the Jew has been elevated, ed to epeak, to a degree of evilness which he had never before obtained (10, 8). That this hatred is of a more than usual pathological noture is suggested by the morbid connection which Hitler makes between the Jew and disease, blood disease, eyphilis (9), ond filthy exorescences of all sorts. in fact is not even a becet, he is o creature outsido noture (16). He is st the root of all things evil not only in Germany but elsewhere end only through his destruction may the world be saved. this point, too, that Hitler's feelings shout roce find expression. For him there is an inner emotional connsation between sex, syphilie, blood impurity, Jewishness and the degeneration of pure, healthy, and virile racial strains. Like the need for aggression, hie fear of the tainting of blood is a major element in Hitler's personality structure.

Hitler's Attitude toward Sex. That Hitler's ottitude toward sex is pathelogical is already claor from what has been said above. The best sources we have do not, however, tall us explicitly what it is that is wrong with Hitler's sex life. From the fact that his close associate, Rbhm, as well as many of the early Nazis wers homosexuals it has been a matter of goseip that Hitler too is effected in this way. All reliable sources, however, deny that there is any evidence whatever for such on ides (8). In fact, Hitler eppears to have no closs men friends, no intimates at ell. Rbhm was the only one whom he addressed with the intimate "du" (5) and it is reported that no one has succeeded since the latter's dooth to such a position of intimacy.

In regard to women, the reports are conflicting.

Most of the recent becks by newspaper men (e.g., 5)

etress Hitler's asceticiem, his dieinterest in women.

Howover, Hsiden (B) documents his love affairs, and Hanisch (7), Strasser (18), and Rauschning (15) have considerable to say about his sttitude toward tho opposits sax. As for as can be escentained, it is completely locking in respect, even contemptuous (7); it is opportunistic (18; 16) and in the octual sexual relationship there is something of o perverse noture olong with o peculiar analavement to the partner of his cheice (8). It is certain that many wemen find Hitler foscinoting (16; 7) and that he likes their company, but it is also true that he has never married, and in svary love offair the break was meds, not by Hitler, but by the ledy concerned (8). In one case, that of his miscs, Geli, there was real tragedy involved for sither he murdered her in o fit of passion, according to Strasser's evidence (18), or he so abused ond upset her that she committed euicide (8). one must mention again hie frenzied outburst against syphilis in Mein Kampf (9) as if the whole German nation were a vast putrifying hotbed of this loathsome deseess. Reidon's etotement (8) that "there is something wrong" with Hitler's sex life is surely an eloquent understatement

Hitler's need to Talk. - This rather obvious naed is worth noting at this point, after what has just been eaid above. 11 Ever since Hitler's discovery of hie fecility as a speaker, his own people and the world have been deluged with his words. The number of speeches is large, varying in length from one end a half to two hours, though there are esveral of three and even four hours' duration. In privets, moreover, Hitler seldom converses, for each individual whom he addresses is a new audience to be harangued, In his moments of depression ha must telk to prove to himself his own strangth and in moments of exaltation to dominate others (16).

Hitler's Attitude toward Art. - Though Hitlar's fether intended him to be a civil servant, he himself creved to be an artist and his failure to be recognized as such by the Vienna school was one of his most traumatic expariances (9). As Führer his interest in art continues and he shows distinctly favorable attitudes toward music, painting, and architecture.

As is well known, Wagnar ie Hitlar's favorite --we might almost say only -- composer. At twalve he was captiveted by Lohengrin (9), at nineteen in Vienna he was championing the merite of Wagnar as Meistersinger over a hundred times (19). He knows all of Wagner's scores (19) and in their randition he gets emotional release and inspiration for his actions. His savier complex, feelings about sex, race purity, his attitudes toward food and drink, all find etimulus and reinforcement in the plots, persons, and themes of his favorite composer. It is interesting, for example, that Hitler has chosen Nuremberg, the town which Wagner personified in Hans Sachs, as the official eite of the meeting of the annual Nazi Party Congrese (19).

Wagner's influence over Hitler extends beyond the realm of music to that of literature. Among the Führer's favorite readings are Wagner's political writings, and consciously or unconsciously he has copied Wagner's turgid end bombastic manner with a resulting style which according to Heiden often transforms "a living centence into a confused heap of bomy, indigestible worde" (8, 308).

In the field of painting there are two matters to consider -- Hitler's own work end his ettitude toward the work of othere. As regards the former, we have evidence that during his Vienna days Hitler showed little sbility except for copying the painting of others (7). Some of the worke that are extent, however, display some fleir for organization and color, though there is nothing original. Many of his paintings show a preoccupation with architecture, old ruins, and with empty desclate places; few of them contain people. The somewhat backneyed designs of the party badge and flag give further evidence of lack of originality. As regards the painting of others, Hitler has currounded himself with military pictures of ell sorte end with portraits of very literal and explicit nudes (13; 18). At his command derman art has been purged of its modernism, and classis qualities are stressed instead.

^{11.} Prom the enalytic noint of view this way well he

It is in architecture that Hitler's artistic interest finds its greatest outlet. He spends a great deal of time over architect's designs and all important German buildings end menuments must be approved by him. Massiveness, expansiveness, size, end classic design are the qualities which Hitler etresses end approved in the buildings of the new Germany. Hie seventy-five-foot-broad motor roads, the conference grounds at Nuremberg, and his retreat at Berchteegaden are all examples of these emphases.

Hitler's Ascetic Qualities. Hitler's ascetic qualities are popularly known and are substantiated by many writers (5; 13). Hitler himself, according to Rauschning (16), accordits his vegetarienism end his abstinance from tobacco and alochol to Wagner's influence. He ascribes much of the decay of civilization to abdominal poisoning through exceeses. This escetiem of Hitler's is all the more striking among a people who, on the whole, are heavy eaters and fond of drinking. It is worthy of note, however, that et times Hitler is not averse to certain types of overindulgence. He is, for example, excessively fond of sweets, sweetmeate, and pastry (7; 15), and will consume them in lerge quantities.

Eitler's Psculiar Abilities.— Hitler, the uneducated, is nevertheless a man of unusual ability, particularly in eartain areas where fermal education is of little value and sven in areas where it is supposed to be important. More than once we find those who know him (s.g., Rausohning (16) stressing his extraordinary ability to take a complicated problem and reduce it to very simple terms. It is hardly necessary to document Hitler's ability to understand and make use of the weeknesses of his opponents, his ability to divide them and strike them one by one, his sanse of timing so as to strike at the most opportune moment. It is certain, however, that these abilities of Hitler's have definite limitations. Hitler has become more and more insplated (16) from contact with what is actually occurring and thus has insufficient or incorrect data on which to base his decisions. Moreover, his own frame of reference is an unsatisfactory guide to an understanding of peoples outside the European milieu. He has, conesquently, frequently misunderstood both British and American points of view with unhappy results to his own program of expansion.

overt Evidence of Maladjustment. - Certsin feats symptomatic of maledjustment have already been mentioned, such as his peculiar relationship to women. Here there have to be added others of a less specific nature. Hitler suffers from severs incomnis and when he does sleep has violent nightmarss (16). At times he suffers from hallucinetions, often hearing voices on his long solitery walks (16). He has an excessive fear of poisoning and takes extreme precautions to guard egainst it both in his food and in his bedroom (16). Here the bed must be made only in one specific way (15). He cannot work steadily, but with explosive outbursts of activity or not at all (16; 8). Even the smallest decision demands great effort and he has to work himself up to it. When thwarted, he will break out into an hysterical tentrum, scolding in high-pitched tones, feaming at the mouth, and stamping with uncontrolled fury (16). On esveral eccasions, when an important speech was due, he has atood silent before his audience and then walked out on them (16). In the case of at least one international broadcast he was suddenly and inexplicably cut off the eir. Finally, there is Hitler's threat to commit suicide if the Nazi party is destroyed or the plans of the German Reich feil (6).

THE SOURCES OF HITLER'S MALADJUSTMENTS

The Sources of Hitler's Aggressive and Submissive

Traits. - The schizoid temparament, one such se Hitler's, which combines both a sensitive, shy, and indrawn nature with inhibitions of faciling toward others, and et the seme time, in way of compensation, violent eggressivanass, callouanses, and brutality, from one point of visw of constitutional psychology is usually associated with e particular type of physique. It is difficult from the sort of photograph aveilable to classify

Hitler's physique accurately. He probably falls in Kretschmer's athletic group though verging on the pyknic (11). This would place him in the schizophrenic group of tempsraments. In terms of Sheldon's ayatsm, he is probably classifiable as a 443 with a considerable degree of gynandromorphy, that is, an essentially masculine body but one showing feminine characteristics also (17).

Probably more important, however, is the social milieu and the family situation in which Hitler grew up. In a strongly patriarchal society, his father was perticularly aggressive and probably brutel toward his sen, Adolf. This would produce an individual both very submissive to authority and at the same time boiling over with reballiousness to it. Further, we know of the extreme attachment which Hitler had for his mother. If, as seems most likely, he has never outgrown this, 12 there might be a protect in his nature against this enslevement, which in turn might give rise to a deep unconecious hatred, a possible source of frightful unconecious rage. 13 Finally.

¹² Nots Hitlsr's fraquent and unusual use of the word Motherland for Germany (9).

¹³ Hitler's hatred of meet end love of swests is said to be often found in cases harboring an unconscious hate of the mother (15).

the consistent failure to schieve his artistic ambitions, his loneliness and poverty in Vienna, his failure to arrive at any higher status than that of corporal in his beloved army (8), all must have stimulated in highest degrees whatever original tendancy there was toward brutality and destructiveness.

The sources of Hitler's Anti-Semitism .- Anti-Senitism was part of the social milieu in which Hitler graw up. He admits himself (9) that he avoided the only Jewish boy at school and it is known that anti-Semitism and esceticism were strong in Catholio rural communities in Europe. In Vienna, of course. Hitler came in contact with violent anti-Semitic literature and it is at this period that he claims his desp-rooted hetred for the Jews was born (9). The pathological strength of this hatrad suggests that there were ceptein psychological as wall as cultural reasons for it. What they were we can only surmise but we can list certain possibilities. know that the name Ritler is a common Jawish ons (8), that Adolf was teased about his Jewish appearance in Vienna, 14 There is, too, the mystery of

¹⁴ It is interesting that Hitler's description of the first Jew to arouse his hatred is almost word for word the same as Hanisch's description of Hitler in Vienna (7).

Aloia Hitler's true parentege which his son may have known. We sloo know that many of the people who helped him, gave him food, and bought hie paintings were Jews. 15 To have to accept kindnesses from people he disliked would not add to his love of them. But there must be more to it than this for Hitler's enti-Semitism is bound up with his morbid concarn with syphilie and phobia over contamination of the blood of the Garman race. This, therefore, leads to e discussion of Hitler's theories.

Sources of Hitler's Theories of Race and Blood. The concept of the superiority of the Aryan race is, of courss, not new with Hitler. Its great exponent was Houston Stewart Chamberlain. In the writings of Wagner also the same conception is exalted. But the constant repetition of the idea of blood, pure blood, and untsinted blood which occurs in Kein Kampf calls for a more than purely cultural explanation. This is suggested all the more forcefully because of the association which Hitler makes between impurities of blood which are due to disease (syphilis) and impurities in the blood of a superior race due to mixture with a recislly inferior stock; further to the fact that he points to the Jaws es the cource of beth.

¹⁵ His rejection of the Jew may also stem from the rejection within himself of the passive gentle elements which are prominent in Hebrew-Christian thought.

Now it is known that syphilophobis often has its roots in the childhood discovery of the nature of sexual congress between the parents. With a father who was an illegitimate and possibly of Jewish origin, 16 and a strong mother fixation, such a discovery by the child Adolf may well have laid the basis of a syphilomother phobia which some adventure with a Jewish prostitute in Vienna fanned to a full flame. Terrified by the fear of his own infection, all the hatred in his being is then directed toward the Jews.

ONE POSSIBLE PSYCHOLOGICAL INTERPRETATION

Within the normal range, may now be described as of the paramoid type with delusions of persecution and of grandeur. This stems from a sado-masochietio split in his personality (4). Integral with these slternating and opposed elements in his personality are his feer of infection, the identification of the ¹⁵ The name Hitler is Jewieh es was pointed out.

^{.17} This is more conjecture and must be trested es such. But it is the sort of explanation which fits known psychological facts.

Jews as the source of that infection, and some derangement of the sexual function which makes his relations to the opposite sex abnormal in pature.

The drama end tragedy of Hitler's life are the projection onto the world of his own inner conflicts. and his attempts to solve them. The split in Hitler's personality ssems clearly to be due to his identification both with his mother, whom he pessionately loved, and with his father, whom he hated and feared. This dual and contradictory identification (the one is gentle, passive, feminine; the other brutal, aggressive, meaduline) results -- whenever Hitler is playing the aggressive role -- also in a deep hatred and contampt for his mother and love and admiration for his father. This inner conflict is projected into the world where Garmany comes to represent the mother, and the Jew and an for e time -- the Austrien State. the father. Just as the fether is the cause of his mixed blood, the source of his domination and punishment, and of the reetrictions of hie own artistio devalopment; just as in the childish interpretation of sexuel congrees the fether attacks, etrenglos, and infaota the mother, so the Jew, international Jewish cepitel, etc., encircle and restrict Germany, threaten and attack her and infect her with impurities of blood. Out of the hetred of the father and love of the mother, came the desire to save her. So Hitler becomes the savior of Germany, who cleanses her of infection, destroys her enemiss, breaks their encirclement, removes every restriction upon her so that she may sxpand into new living space, uncremped and unthrottles. At the same time, Hitler is cleaning himself, defending himself, casting off paternal domination and restriction.

Not only is the Father feared but he is a source of jaslousy for he possesses, at least in part, the beloved mother. So he must be destroyed to permit complete possession. The destruction of the father is achieved symbolically by the destruction of the Austrian. State and complete domination and possession of the mother through gathering all Germans in a common Reich.

But the mother is not only leved but hated. For sha is wesk, besides he is enslaved to her affections and she reminds him all too much, in his rolls as dominant father, of his own gentle sensitive nature. So, though be depends on the German people for his position of dominance, he despises and hatse them, ha dominetas them and, because he fears his vary love of them, he leeds them into the destructiveness of war where multitudes of them ere destroyed.

Besides, the Jewish elament in his father identificstion permits him to use all the so-called "Jawish" tricks of deceit, lying, violence, and sudden attack both to subject the German people as well as their foes.

To be dominent, aggressive, brutal is to srouse the violant protest of the other aide of his nature. Only savers enxiety can come from thie; nightmeres and sleepleas nights result. But fear is assuaged by the fiction of the demands of Fate, of Deetiny, of the Folk-Soul of the German people.

The denousment of the drama approaches at every eggrsssive stap. The fiction of the command of Fate only holde as long as there is success -- greater and groster success to assuage the mounting feelings of snxiety and guilt. Aggression, therefore, has elimit; it cannot go beyond the highest point of success. When that is reached, the personality may collapse under the flood of its own guilt feelings. It is, therefore, quite possible that ¹⁸ That Hitler is partly conscious of this we know from his own threats of suicide and references to dying for the German people (9).

Hitler will do eway with himself et whatever moment German defeet becomes sufficient enough to destroy the fiction of Pate which has shielded him from the violence of his own guilt. He may then turn upon himself the destructiveness which so long has been channelled toward his people and their neighbors.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- 1. Bloch. E. MY PATIENT HITLER. Collier's, Merch 15, 1941.
- 2. Dodd, M. THROUGH EMBASSY EYES. New York: Harcourt, Brece, 1939.
- 3. Farago, L. GERMAN PSYCHOLOGICAL WARFARE.
- New York: Committee on National Morale, 1941.
- 4. Frome, E. ESCAPE FROM PREEDOM. New York: Farrer & Rinchart, 1941.
- 5. Gunther, J. INSIDE EUROPE. New York end London: Harper, 1986.
- 6. Haffner, S. GERMANY: JEKYLL AND HYDE. London: Secker & Werburn, 1940.
- Hanisch, R. I WAS HITLER'S BUDDY. 7. New Republic, April 5, 1939. .8. Heiden, K. HITLER, A BIOURAPHY.
 - London: Constable, 1936. Hitler, A. MEIN KAMPF. New York: Reynsl & Hitchcook, 1939.
- 10. Hitler, A. MY NEW ORDER. New York: Heynal & Hitchcock, 1941.
- 11. Kretschmer, E. PHYSIQUE AND CHARACTER. New York: Harcourt, Brace, 1925.
- INSIDE HITLEH. 12. Krueger, K. New York: Avalon Press, 1941.
- 13. Lewis, W. HITLER CULT. London: Dent, 1939. London: De June 23, 1941. 14. Life.
- 15. Medioue. A PSYCHIATHIST LOOKS AT HITLER. New Republio, April 26, 1939.
- 16. Rauschning, H. HITLER SPEAKS.
- London: Butterworth, 1939. 17. Sheldon, W.H. THE VARIETIES OF HUMAN PHYSIQUE. New York: Harper, 1940.
- 18. Strasser, O. HITLER AND I. Boeton: Houghton Mifflin, 1940.
- 19. Viereok, P. METAPOLITICS. New York: Knopf. 1941.

SECTION III

Detailed Analysis of Hitlar's Personality

(Written espacially for psychologists and psychiatriats)

FOREWORD TO THE DETAILED ANALYSIS

In writing this enelysis of Hitler's pareonality, the use of cartain tachnical words was unavoidable. Although I have ettempted to follow as simple and intelligible a form as possible, I could not, without much oircumlocution and vegueness, get along without three terms:

Need (roughly synonymous with Drive, impulse, tendency, purpose, instinct). This is a force within the subject (i.e., the individuel whose behavior is being studied) which inclines him to strive toward e certain goel, the etteinment of which reduces momentarily the tension of the need. Needs vary in kind end in strength.

Press (plurel: prese). This is e force, emaneting from en object (usually e person) in the environment, which is directed towerd the subject. A press (for the subject) is the need or drive in the object, which, if successful, would harm or benefit him. Press very in kind end in strength.

Cathexis. This is the power of an object to erouse feelings of liking (poeitive oathaxis) or of dieliking (negative cethaxia) in the subject. It is also permissible to say that the subject

"positively oathects" or simply "csthacts" (values, admires, loves) one object; or that he "negatively cathacts" (dapreciates, ecorns, fears, hates) another. The osthexis (potency) of objects -- their ability to evoke behavior in the subject -- can vary in kind (positive or negative) or in strength.

1. STATEMENT OF THE PROBLEM

Thirty years ago Hitlar was a common bum, an unemployed nonantity, a dereliot of the polyglot society that was Vienna. "It was a miserable life," his pal, Hanisch, has written, "and I once asked him what he was really waiting for. He answered: 'I don't know mysalf.' I have never seen such helpleas letting-down in distress."

Twenty years later Hitler was dictator of all Germany. He was not waiting for anything; but demanding and getting all that a boundlessly ambitious man could want. Many people thought that they had never seen such resolute confidence in victory.

Three years ago, at the ags of fifty-one, Hitler was the most powerful and successful individual on earth, on the ons hand, the most worshipped, on the other, the most despised. In Germany he was virtually a demigod; he had unlimited powar; he was olways right; he could do no wrong; he was the sevior of the Vatarland, the conqueror of Europe, the divinely appointed prophet of a new era. There was a Hitler Strasse or Hitler Platz in every town. "Heil Hitler" was the convantial greating for acquaintances. The man's picture was prominently displayed in every public building, in every railroad atation, in millions of homes. His autobiography was accapted as the Biblo of e revolutionary folk religion. Hitler was compared to Christ.

The men is chiefly interesting as a force that has affected the lives of more people on this globe than any men in history, cided, to be sure, by new and miraculous instruments of communication. How was it possible for a man so insignificent in attura and eppearance, so deficient in bodily strength and emotional control, so lacking in intellectual attainments — how was it possible for such a men to succeed where the mightiest Germans of the past had foiled? What kind of o men is this Hitler? What are his chief abilities and disabilities? What conditions in Germany were conducive to his meteoric rise to power?

get their hande on him, how oan he be treated so that he will never rise again as a legendary figure to instigate another Satanio revolution against oulture? These are among the questions that have been faced in this paper.

The aspects of Hitler's personality that especially require explanation are these: the intensity of the man'e dedication to the creation of an ideal; the nature of hie life-drems, or Mission, se he conceives it: the fenaticism of his centiments pro Pewer. Glory, Dictatorship, Militarism, Brutelity, the Aggressiva Instinct. Nationaliem. Purity of Blood: and the fanaticism of his sentiments con Weakness, Indecision, Tolerance, Compassion, Peace, Retional Debate, Democracy, Bolshevism, the Acquisitive Instinct, Materialism, Capitalism, the Jewish Rece, Christienity. Also of interest are: the nature of his oratorical power over the emotions of the massee: his painting and architechtural interests; the vagaries of his sox instinct; and the significance of his neurotic end paychotic symptoms.

II. PHYSICAL CONSTITUTION

1. Physique

A point of fundamental importance is the large gynic (feminine) component in Hitler's constitution.

His hips are wide and his choulders relatively Hie muscles are flabby; his legs thin and spindly, the latter boing hidden in the past by hoavy boots and more recently by long trousers. is hollow chested, and in the throes of pasaionata speech his voice sometimes breaks into shrill falsetto. In contrast to his macoulino ideal for German youth, Hitler's physical strength and agility are definitely below the average. He was frail as a child, never labored in the fielde, never played rough games. He has long tapering sensitive fingers. In Vienna, he was too weak to be omployed on construction jobe and before the outbreak of World Wer I was rejected by the Austrian Army as parmemently disqualified for eervice. He was discouraged after one attempt to ride a horse, and in the last twenty years his exercise has been limited to short walke. informante eay that ho is physically incapable of normal soxual roletione. His movemente have been doecribed as womanish - o dointy ladylike way of walking (when not assuming o military carriage in public), offeminate gestures of his arms -- a peculiar gracelsss ineptitude reminiscent of a girl throwing a baseboll.

2. Medical and Psychiatric History

Hitler has suffered from nervous gastritis, or indigestion, for many years. This is probably e psychosometic syndrome, part and parcel of his general nauroticism.

A German psychiatriat who examined Fitler's medical record in World Wer I has reported that the diagnosis of his condition was hysterical blindness. In other words, he did not suffer from mustard gas poisoning, as publicly stated, but from a war neurosis. It has also been seid that he was not only blind but dumb, and (according to one informant) deef.

Same years ago a benign polyp was remaved from a vocal chord.

Hitler is a victim of temper tentrums which have increased in intensity and frequency during the last ten years. A typical seizurs consists of (1) pacing, shouting, curaing, blaming, accusations of treachery and betrayal; (2) weeping and exhibitions of selfpity; ond (5) falling on the floor, foaming at the mouth, biting the carpet. The man has some control over these epileptiform attacks, using them to get his own way with his close associates.

REPRODUCED AT THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

Hitler slso suffers from sgitsted depressions, affrighting nightmeres, hypochondriccol states in which he fears that he will be poisoned or die from osncer of the stomach.

III: APPEARANCE AND EXPRESSIVE ATTITUDES

The most significant fact sbout Hitler's sppearance is its utter insignificance. He is the protetype of the little man, an unnecessary duplicate, apparently, that one would never turn to look at twice. For tan years, notwithstanding, Germana have been gazing at him end, apellbound, seen the magnitic figure of one who could have said and done what Hitler has soid and done.

Comments have chiefly contered on Hitler's eyes ond his hands. Although his greyish-blue eyes are usually stary and deed, impersonal and unseeing, at times he looks a man or woman straight in the face with a fixed, unwavering gazo that has been described es positively hypnotic. Behind the habitual vacancy of expression some discern an intense flame of pessionate dedication. His hands are strikingly well-shaped and expressive, and in harenguing an audience they are used to good effect.

In all other respects, Hitler's appearance is totally lacking in distinction. His features are ecft, his cheeks sallow and puffy, his handehake loose, his palms meist and clemmy. Such features can hardly be appreciated by the average visitor as evidences of an Iron Man.

many parts. There is the expressionless Hitler, like a dummy stending with upreised hand in the front of a six-wheeled motorcar that moves at a slow pace down the great avenue between serried ranks of shouting worshipful adherents. There is the embarraseed Hitler, ill at case, even subsarvient, in the presence of a stranger, an arietocrat, a greet general, or a king (as on his visit to Italy). There is the gracious Hitler, the soft, good-natured Austrian, gentle, informal, and oven modest, welcoming friendly admirera at his villa; as well as the sentimental Hitler, weeping over a deed canary. Then there is the tectiosl

Hitler, who comes in at the oritical moment with the daringly right decision; and the mystical Ritler; hinting of e thousand years of superiority for the German folk; the possessed Hitler, ehricking with fanetical fury es he exhorte the masses; tho hysterical Hitler, rolling on the cerpet or shaking with terror as he wakes from a nightmare; the apsthetic Hitler, limp, indolent, and indecisive; and et all times, the soapbox Hitler, reedy to go off helf-cocked on a long tirade even though he is addressing a single individual. Of ell these, it is tha tectical Hitler, the mystical Hitler, and the possessed Hitler which have been chiefly instrumentel in winning the position he now holds. It is because of these powerful inhabitants of his being that people have eccepted and tolerated the less appealing or less basreble inhabitants.

IV. PAST HISTORY

Chronology*

1837 Maria Anna Schicklgruber has en illegitimate eon, Alois, born in Strones, noar Spitel Johann Georg Hiedler (Hitler) m. Merie Anna Schicklgruber 1850 Birth of Klare Poelzl in Spitel 1877, Jan. 6 Aloie Schioklgruber logitimized ee Alois Hitler Alois Hitler m. Anna Glasl-Horer (14 years older) Death of Anna Glael-Horer in Braunau 1883 1883 Aloia Hitler m. Frenziska Metzolberger Birth of Aloie Hitler Jr., 2 months after ca1885 marriege 1884 Birth of Angela Hitler Death of Franziska Matzelborger 1884 1885. Jan. 7 Aloie Hitler (47 years) m. Klara Poelzl Birth of two children who die in infoncy 1889, Apr. 20 Bipth of Adolf Hitler in Braunau Family move to Paesau (Bavoria) on Austrian border. oe1893 Aloie Hitler retires on a pension Family move to Lambsch (24 miles from Linz); Catholic convent oa1896. Birth of Peula Hitler Family move to Leonding (suburb of Linz); oa1900 Technical School 1905, Jan. 3 Deeth of Alois Hitler Family move to Linz Adolf Hitlor attends achool in Steyr 1904-5 1907, Oct. Mitler fails to pase examination of Academy of Arts, Vienna 1907. Dec. 21 Klara Hitler dies (A. H. ie 18 years old) 1908, Jan. A. H. moves to Vienna 1908, Oct. A. H. faile a second time to pose examination of Academy of Arts 1913 A. H. movee to Munioh.

^{*} Not all these dates are reliable; meet of the early once are from Gunther's INSIDE EUROPE.

A. CHILDHOOD AND ADOLESCENCE 1889 - 1907

I. Family Relations

1. Father

Some of the confusion that has arisen in regard to Hitler's forebeers disappears as soon as we realize the name Hitlor has been variously spelled - Hidler, Hiedler, Huottler - by different members of the same illiterate peasant family. Adolf Hitler's paronts were both descended from one Hitler (fathor's grandfather and mother's greot-grandfather), an inhabitant of the culturally backward Weldviertel district, Upper Auetrie.

Mershal Hindenburg

Alcia Hitler --Hitler's Tethor. Note resemblence to Hindenburg.

Pamily History and Personelity of Father

The chief facts about Alois Hitler which have bearing on our enalysis are these:

- (a) According to an inquiry ordered by the Austrian Chanceller, Dollfuss, Meria Anna Schickl-gruber became pregnant during her employment as a servant in a Jewish Vienness family. For this reason she was sent back to her home in the country. If this is true, Alois Hitler may have been half-Jewish. The fact that he selected e Jew, Herr Prinz of Vienna, to be the godfather of his son Adolf, is in line with this hypothesis.
- (b) In any event, Alois Hitler was illegitimate and as such was no doubt made to suffer the contempt of the little community, Spital, in which he was resred. Rerhaps it was for this reason that he left his home at an early age to seek his fortune in Vienna.
- (c) Aloia Hitler started life as a simple cobbler but finelly improved his status by becoming a customs official. For e time he patrolled the German-Austrien border, wee known as a 'man-hunter'. He was very proud of this position, believing that it entitled him to lord it over those of the class that had once soorned him.

- (d) In eppearance Alois Hitler resembled Marshal Hindenburg. He had a wolrus moustache, under which protruded sullen and arrogant a lower lip. He wore an uniform, his badge of status; and as a border potrolman carried a revolver on his person. He smoked and ran after women. It is esid that he frequented the village pub end enjoyed nothing eo much as recounting his occomplishments to a receptive suditory. He was a coarse man, with boasts and curses forever on his tongue. He died of apoplexy.
- (e) He was twenty-three years older than his wife, a peasant girl who had once served as a maid in the house of his first wife. Thus, the father's greater age, his higher social status, the traditional prerogstives of the husband in the German femily, the man's over-weening pride -- all supported him in maintaining a mester-servant relationship with his wife. Frau Hitler was nervous, mild, devoted, and submissive. In his own home, Aloia Hitler was styrant.
- (f) In his treatment of his son Adolf, it is said that the father was etern end harsh. Physical punishments were frequent. He seems to have looked on his son as a weakling, a good-for-nothing, moonstruck dreamer; at times porhaps his vanity imagined a successful ceraor for the boy, which would still further lift the femily status, and so when young Adolf announced his intention to be an ertist the father, percaiving the frustration of his dream, put his foot down -"An artist, no, never as long as I live." (M.K. 14).

- (g). There is some doubt about the complexion of Alois Hitler's political assistments. Hanisch reports that "Hitlar haard from his father only preise of Germany and ell the faults of Austria;" but, according to Heiden, more raliable informants cleim that the fether, though full of complaints and criticisms of the government he sarvad, was by no means a German nationalist. They say he favored Austria against Germany.
- (h) It is not unlikely that Hitler in writing his sketch of the typical lower class home draw upon his personal experiences, end if this is true, the following peaseges give us an interesting side-light on the character of the father:
 - (i) But things end badly indeed when the man from the very start goes his own way (Alois Hitlar 'ran after other woman') and the wifa, for the aske of her children, at stands up against him. Quarreling and nagging set in, and in the sams measure in which the husbend becomes astranged from his wife, he becomes familiar with alcohol... When he finslly comes home on Sunday or Monday night, drunk and brutal, but always without a last cent and penny, then God have mercy on the scenes which follow. I witnessed oll of this personally in hundreds of scenes and at the beginning with both disgust and indignation...

(M.K. 38-38).

The other things the little fallow hears at home do not tend to further his reapeot for his surroundings. Not s single shrad is left for humanity, not a single institution is laft unattacked; starting with the teacher, up to the hasd of the State, be it religion, or morelity as such, be it the State or Society, no metter which, averything is abused, averything is pulled down in the nestical manner into the filth of a deproved mentality, (M.K. 43).

(1) Ralations to Fathar

There are reasons to believe that the boy Adolf was vary much afreid of his father in his aarly yaers; that he was timid and submissive in his presence; but when he was out of reach of his father's immense authority (when his father was out of the house or when the boy was at achool under lase aevere diaciplinarians) he was often unruly and defient. He had no respect for a lanient system of government.

Not until ha was eleven did Adolf dare to opposa his fether. Here the issua wes the selection of his vocation: Herr Hitlar wanted his son to follow in his footsteps and bacoma e Stete official; but tha boy decided he wanted to be an artist. Of this conflict between father and aon, Hitler writes:

- (i) His domineering nature, the result of a life-long struggle for existence, would have thought it unbearable to leave the ultimate decision to a boy who, in his opinion, was inexperienced and irresponsible. (M.K. 11).
 - (ii) No matter how firm and dotermined my father might be in carrying out hie plans and intentions once made, his son was just as stubborn and obstinate... (F.K. 12).
 - (iii) ...he opposed me with the recoluteness of his entire nature...The old man became embittered, and, much as 1 loved him, the same was true of myself ...and now the old man relentlessly began to enforce his authority. (M.K. 13-14).

It is obvious from these and other passages, as well as from local hearsay, that the relations of Adolf and his parent from 1900-1903 (when the father died) were exceedingly stormy. It was a classical father-son conflict.

many places, in MEIN KAMPF and in some of his racorded conversations, Hitler speaks of old men in a derogatory and contemptuous manner. It is often very suggestive of what might have been his sentiments towards his sixty-year-old father (twenty-three years older than his mother). The following quotations might be cited in illustration:

- (i) Rauschning: Everywhere, Hitler complained, there were nothing but sterils cld men in their second childhood, who bragged of their technical knowledge and had lost their sound common senee.
- (ii) Hitlor, quotod by Heiden:
 My great adversary, Reichspräsident von Hindenburg, is today eighty-five years of age. I am forty-three and I feel in perfect health. And nothing will happen to me, for I am clearly conscious of the great task which Providence has assigned to me.

2. Mothor

(a) Personality of Mother

The pertinent facts are these:

Klara Poelzl was an exemplary housekeeper. Her home was always spotlessly gleen, everything had its place, not a speck of dust on the furniturs.

She had a gontle nature. Her relatively young age, her docile character, her years of domestic service -- all inclined her to compliance and Christian resignation. The trials and tribulations of life with an irascible husband resulted in a permanent attitude of abnegation. Toward her son Adolf she was ever devoted, catering to his whims to the point of spoiling him. She it was who encouraged his artistic ambitions.

The mother was operated on for cancer of the breast in the summer of 1907 and died within six months. It is very likely that the disease was marked by ulcerations of the chest wall and metastases in the lungs.

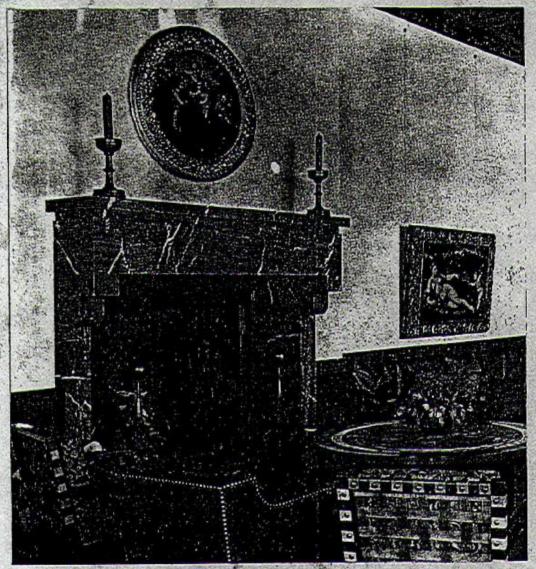

(b) Relations to Mother.

Hitler has written very little and said nothing publicly about his mother, but the few scraps obtained suggest many youthful years of loving dependence upon her. Hitler speaks of:

(i) ...the mother devoting herself to the cares of the household looking after her children with eternally the same loving kindness. (M.K. 5).

- (ii) For threa or four of the 5 years between hie fether's and his mother's death. Adolf Hitler idled away a good deal of his time as the indulged apple of hie mother's She allowed him to drop his etudies at the Realschule; she encouraged him in hie ambitions to be a painter; she yialded to his every wish. During these years, it is reported, the reletionship between mother and aon was marked by reciprocal adoration. Hitler's amezing self-essurence (at most times) can be attributed in part to the impression of these years when at the age of thirtaen his father died end he succeeded to the power and became the little dictator of the family. His older brother, Alois, had laft by this time, and he was the only male in a household of four. "These were my happiest deys; they accomed like a dream to me, and eo they were." (M.K. 25).
- (111) Hitler writee: "My mother's death...was a terrible shock to me...I loved my mother."
- (iv) Dr. Block reports that Adolf cried when he heard of his mother's sufferings at operation and later at her death exhibited great grief. The doctor has never seen anyone so prostrate with sorrow. After the burisl in the Catholio cemetary, Adolf stayed by her grave long after the others had departed.
- (v) Hitler wore the picture of his mother over his breast in the field during world War 1.
- (vi) That the mother-child relationship were a compelling, though rajected, pettern for Hitler may be surmised from (1) his attachment to 'substitute mothers' during his post-war years, (2) his frequent use of 'mother imagery' in epeaking and writing, and (3) his selection of pictures of Madonna and child to decorate his rooms.

Corner of Big Room at Berchtesgaden. Painting of Madonna & Child over mantel.

From these and other bits of evidence we can conclude that Hitler loved his mother and hated his father, that he had an Oedipus Complex, in other words. But, as we shall soon see, this can explain only one phase of his relationship to his parents.

EPRODUCED AT THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

(c) Siblings

It is certain that there were two older children in the household during Adolf's early years. The father had been married twice before; thore was e half-brother, Alois Hitler, Jr., and a half-sister, Angela Hitler. We know nothing of Hitler's relation-ship to the former (who much leter turned up in Berlin as proprietor of a restaurant). The half-sister, Angele, married Herr Raubal, an official in the tax bureau in Linz. Later she managed a restaurant for Jewish students at the University of Visnna. For some years she was Hitler's housekeeper at Berchtesgaden, until she married Professor Martin Hammizsch of Dreeden, where she now lives.

(i) Several informants have steted that there is a younger sister, Paula, born when Adolf was about seven years old. Consequently, he must have experienced the press Birth of Sibling during his childhood. This younger sister, it seems, is a very peculiar, seclusive person who now lives in Vienna. It has been eaid that she had affaire with several men in turn, one of whom was a Jew. It is believed that she is mentally retarded.

- (ii) There are reports of two children who disd in infency before Adolf was born. One of these may have been Edmund, or Gustaf, mentioned by some informants.
- The state of the s
- (s) Physical Weakness.— Adolf was a frail lad, thin and pale. He did not participate in any athletics or enjoy hard physical exercise. He was sensitive and liked to be with his mother, look at books, aketch landscapes; or take walks by himself. He liked to daydream about Germany's wars, but he did nothing to fit himself to be a soldier. When he tired of school (ashamed of his inferiority in scholarship), he became nervously sick (feigned lung trouble), and his mother permitted him to drop out and atay at home.
- (b) Low Toleranos of Frustration. One can be certain that, as a child, Adolf rescted violently to frustration. He undoubtedly had temper tantrums which were rewarded by his mother's resdy complished to his wishes. (This was his way of "courting the soul of the common people".) He was also finnicky about food, wa can be sure.

- (c) Rebelliousness and Repeated Aggression.At home disciplins was espricious: His fother was often unusually severe, his mother inordinately lenient. As a result, he developed no steady and consistent character; he alternated between subservience (to placate his father) and unrulinesa.
 - (i) Lansing: His first teacher recalled...that he was a quarrelsome, stubborn lad who smoked cigarets and cigar stubs collected from the gutter or begged from roisterers in the public houses.
 - (ii) Hanish reports that Hitler told him that the paople of the Innviertel were graat brawlers and that, as a boy, he used to love to watch their fights. Also, that he used to enjoy visiting a fine exhibition in Linz of deadly weapons. What others abhorred eppealed to him. (N.B., Here is fair evidence of repressed aggression (sodism) during boyhood.)
 - (iii) Hitler, as a mere boy of tan, become passionately interested in reading sbout the "amazingly victorious campaign of the heroic German armies during the France-Prussian War". Soon this had become "my greatest spiritual experience". (M.K. 8).
 - (iv) I raved more and more about everything connected with war or militarism. (M.K. 8).
 - (v) A careful examination of the first chapter of MEIN KAMPF will convince any psychologically trained reader that Adolf's vigorous advocacy of the cause of Germany os opposed to that of Austria from the age of eleven onward represented o legitimate substitute for his represed rebellion against his father. Inspired by his history teacher, Professor Pootsch (fathersurrogate), and a long line of German military heroes, the boy could give vant to his pent-up resentment by publicly proclaiming his devotion to the German Raich of Biemark and vohemently denouncing the authority of Austria (symbol of his father). In MEIN KAMPF Hitler writes at length of his possession of:

(vi) ...on intense love for my native German-Austrian country and a bitter hatred sgainst the 'Austrian' State. (M.K. 22-23).

Speaking of the youthful Nationalist movement that he joined, he writes:

(vii) ...it is rsbsllious; it wesrs the forbidden smblem of its own nationality and rejoics in being punished or even in being beaten for wesring that emblem...tno greeting was 'Heil'; and 'Deutschland über alles' was preferred to the imperial anthom, despite warnings and punishments. (M.K. 16).

It was during these days that he first began to play the rôle of a young agitator.

(viii) I believe that oven then my ability for making spesches was trained by the more or less stirring discussinns with my comrsdes...For obvious ressons my father could not appreciate the talent for oratory of his quarrelsome son. (M.K. 7).

The boy's idose of greatest glory revolved round the viotories of the Franco-Prussian War.

(ix) Why was it that Austria had not taken part also in this war, why not my father ...? (M.K. 9). I had dsoidedly no sympathy for the course my father's life had taken.
(M.K. 7). During the years of my unruly youth nothing had grisved me more than having been born at a time when temples of glory were only erected to merchants of State officials (his father's profession). (M.K. 204). I, too, wented to become 'something' -- but in no event an official. (M.K. 26).

These quotations supply further evidence of Adolf's represeed hatrod of his father and of the fact that negativism and wilfulness had become established patterns before puberty.

- (d) Passivity, or Illness, as Mesns of Rosistance.- Hitler manifested a significant aspect of his nature when he determined to frustrate his fathor's intention to make a civil servant out of him. The policy he adopted was that of rosistance through indolence and passivity.
 - (i) I was certain that as soon as my father saw my lack of progress in school ...he would let me seek the happiness of which I was dreaming. (M.K. 14).

Later, after his father's death, when he wanted to leave school, he won his mother's consent by making himself sick.

(i) Impressed by my illness my mother agreed at long last to take me out of school... (M.K. 24).

After this he spent two years of shiftless activity around the house, which set the pottern for his passive drifting and dresming days in Vienns.

- (e) Lack of Friends. No friendehipe dating from boyhood have ever been mentioned and it is not likely that the boy was at ell popular with his class-matos. During adolseosnos he was said to be quiet, serious, droamy and taoiturn.
- (f) Sexual Miebehavior. A Nazi who visited Leonding much later end looked up the echool records there found swidence that at the age of cleven or twelve Adolf had committed a serious eexual indiscration with a little girl. For this he was punished but not expelled from echool.

4. Conclusions

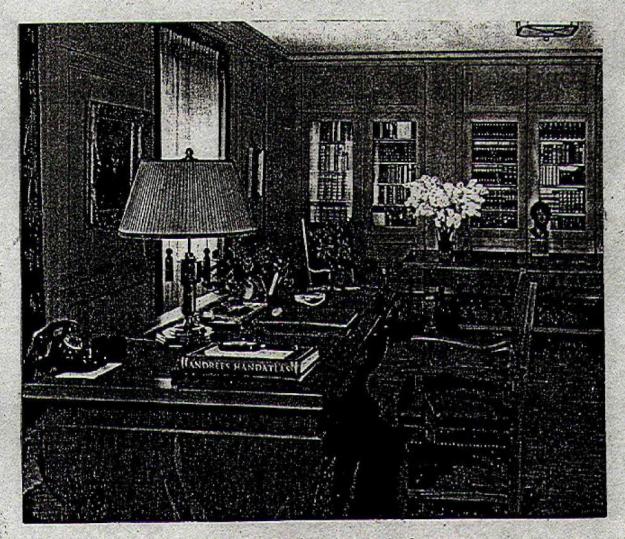

- (s) Hate for Father, Love for Mother, (Oedipus Complex). This has been noted and stroseed by numeroue psychologiets; and some evidence for it has been lieted here. Rerely mentioned but equally important is:
- Wasknoss of Mother. Hitler is certainly not a typical product of the Oedipus complox, and more con be learned about the underlying forces of his character by observing which parent he has smalled, rather than which parent he has loved. In MEIN KAMPF, he writes, "I had respected my father, but I loved my mother."

He might better have said, "I loved my mother, but I respected my father", becouse respect has always meant more to him than love.

- (c) Identification with Fother. Although Hitler has not the physique or temperament of his old man, being constitutionally of enother type, it is evident that he has imitated, consciously or unconsciously, mony of his father's traits and none of his mother's.
- (d) Adolf Hitler's will to powsr, his pride, aggressiveness and cult of brutslity are all in keeping with what we know of the personality and conduct of Alois Hitlar. The son's decloration that he has demanded nothing but ascrificas from his adherente is certainly reminiscent of the father's attitude toward wife and children.
 - (i) ...his son has undoubtedly inherited, smongst other qualities, a stubbornness similar to his own... (M.K. 14).
- (s) The father's loud, boastful, and perhaps drunken, talk, at home and at the pub (described by some informanta), may well have provided his young son with an impressive model for emulation. The notion of being a village pastor had appealed to Alois Hitlar and that of being an abbot appealed to his boy, no doubt for the same reason -- the opportunity it afforded for oratory.

- (f) Father and son each left home to seek his fortuns in Vienna. In MEIN KAMPF there are several indications that the image of his father's success in Vienna acted as a spur.
 - (i) I, too, hoped to wrest from Fats the aucoesa my father had met fifty years sarlier... (M.K. 25).
 - (ii) And I would overcome these obetaoles, always bearing in mind my father's exampls, who, from being e poor village boy and a obbler's apprentice, had made his way up to the position of civil servant. (M.K. 28).
- (g) Adolf Hitler sported a walrua moustache like his father's for a number of years. He finally trimmed it in imitation of a new sxemplar, Feder.
- (h) Adolf Hitler's invariable uniform and pietol may well have been suggested by Alois Hitler's uniform and pistol (l (d)).
- reapeot for the clase system; was proud of his rise in status; envied those above him and looked down upon those below him. If this is trus, the father was instrumental in establishing a pattern of sentiments which was of determining importance in his con's carser. Adolf Hitler has always been envious of his superiors and deferential; has never chowed any affinity for the prolatarist.

(j) Adolf Hitler has hung a portrait of his father over the desk in his study at Berchtesgaden. This is a signal honor, since the likeness of only three other men -- Frederick the Great, Karl von Moltke, and Mussolini -- have been selected for inclusion in any of Hitler's rooms. There is nowhere any picture of his mother.

Hitler's Study at Berghof. Desk faces portrait of Alois Hitler.

Alois, it is said, was a smoker, a drinker and a lecher; and today his son is remarkable for his abstaniousness. Thus, in these respects the two are different. But we should not forget that Adolf used to pick up eigar butts and smoke them as a boy; he drank beer and wine in his sarly Munich days; and in the last fifteen years has shown a good deal of interest in women.

Thers can be no doubt then that Hitler greatly envied and admired the power and authority of his father; and although he hated him es the tyrant who opposed and frustrated him personally, he looked on him with awe, and admiration, desiring to be as he was. Speaking of his old man, the son confessed in his autobiography that "unconsciously he had sown the saads for a future which neither he nor I would have grasped at that time." (M.K. 24). Henceforth Adolf Hitlsr's attention and emulation was only to bs eveked by a dominating ruthless man, and if this man happened to be in opposition to him, then he would hate and respect him simultaneously. Hitler's admiration for strongly enduring institutions was very similar, it seems, to his admiration for his sixty-year-old parent. He writes:

- (i) ...inoredibly vigorous power that inhabite this age-old inetitution (Catholic Church).
- (ii) ...he (Lueger) was disposed...to ecoure the favor of any existing powerful inetitutione, in order that he might derive from these old cources of strength the greatest possible advantage...
- Identification with Nother .- In Hitler's constitution there is a large gynio (faminine) component and he has many feminina traits, some hidden. Consequently, in view of his avowed love for his mother, wa must suppose that there was a dispositional kinahip or biological identification, batween the two during the boy's earliest years. Adolf naturally and spontaneously felt the way his mother felt. This, however, was not of his own making. There is some evidence that in Hitlar's mind "Germany" is a myetical conception which stands for the ideal mother -- a substitute for his own imperfect mother. But there are no indications, in any event, that Hitler admired his mother or any woman who rasembled her, or that he sdopted sny of her aentiments, or that ha was aven influenced by her in any important way. Hance, the conclusion is that Hitler had many traits in common with his mother; but that he rapudiated these traite as evidences of weakness and famininity, and in so doing repudiated her.

- (k) Rejection of Mother.— To the extent that Hitler respected and emulated his father, he disrespected and denied his mother. Some evidence to demonstrate this point will be brought forward in a later section. Hitler probably loved his mother very much as a person; but his strong dependent attachment to her was a humiliating aign of his incapacity to take care of himself, and hence he was forced to belittle the relationship. At eighteen years he was too near to her weekness, not feminine enough and yst not male enough, to respect her. He writes:
 - (i) I owe much to the time in which I had learned to become hard (in Vienna)... I praise it even more for having reacusd me from the emptiness of an easy life (in Linz with hie mother), that it took the milkeop out of his downy neet and gave him Dama Sorrow for a foster mother... (M.K. 29).

Hanisch reporte that in Vienna Hitler manifeetad a "queer idealiam about love"; but had very little respect for the femsle sax. Every woman he believed could be had. This remark fells in with the evidence to be presented later which suggests that for a time Adolf was indignant with his mother for submitting to hie father, and in the end coorned her for co doing. Since he has always been contemptuous of physical weekness, one might expect him to be contemptuous of women; and there ere some facte to show that this is trus. It is sven possible that efter Herr Hitler's deeth the edolescent Adolf, sdopting his father's role to some extent, somstimes leshed his mother with insolent words end maybe struck her. If this were trus, it would help explain his exceeding grief on the occesion of her deeth, guilt contributing to his dejection, end it might explain a etriking passage in MEIN KAMPF in which Hitler describes the typical lower cless femily.

- (1) When, at the ege of fourteen, the young led is dismissed from school (Adolf dropped school when he was about sixteen ysare), it is difficult to sey which is worse: his unbelievable ignorence as fer es knowledge end ebility ere concerned. or the biting impudence of his behavior. combined with an immorality which makes one's hair stend on end, considering his sge (Adolf's immorality ceme to the notice of hie teechers et the age of twelve yeers)... The three-yeer-old child has now become s youth of fifteen who despisee all euthority (Recell Adolf's conflict with his father) ... Now he loiters shout, end God only knows when he comee homs (Ses p. 7,... "ceused my mother much grief, mads ms snything but e stsy-sthome").; for e change he may even best the poor cresture who was once his mother, curses God and the world... (M.K. 43-44).
- (1) Evidence will be edvanced leter to show that one of the most potent impressions of Hitlsr's sarly life was that of a relationship in which s end scornfully maltreated s gentle end complient woman (his mother). The effecte of being reered under these conditions were lesting: the experience made it impossible for him to believe in, hope for, or enjoy e relationship marked by peece, love, end tenderness.

- The outstending press of the boy's early life were those of p - Aggression and p - Rejection: The former ceme mostly from hie fether; the letter from many people. Among the specific ceusee of thie idea of having been rejected we would liet (1) the birth of e younger sister. Paule, in 1895 or 1896; (2) the opposition of his father; (3) his repeated failures et echool; (4) his lack of friends; (5) the deeth of both parents, making it necessary for him, e pennilese uneduceted and unemployed orphan, to fece the world elone. The sense of being rejected by his femily is in many passages expressed in connection. with his feeling of being excluded from memberehip in the German netion. This point will be taken up leter.
 - (i) Ars we not the seme se ell the other Germans? Do we not all belong together? This problem now began to whirl through my little head for the first time. After cautious questioning, I heard with envy the reply that not every German was fortunate enough to belong to Biemarck's Reich. This I could not understand. (M.K. 9).

- (11) An unnatural separation from the greet common Motherland. (M.N.O. 469).
- (n) Repudiation of Past Self and Family Connections.

 Knowing Hitler's fenatical sentiments against mixed marriages, impure blood, the lower classes, and the Jewish race, it is importent to note the following facts:
- (1) Hie forebears come from e region in which the blood of Bavarians, Bohemisns, Morsvisns, Czechs, and Slovekiane have mixed for generatione. Without doubt all of these etrains ere represented in him.
- (ii) His father wes illegitimate; his grandfather may have been a Viennese Jew.
- (iii) His godfsther, Herr Prinz, was s
- (iv) His fether had three wives, one s waitress, one a domestic servant, and a number of women on the eide (heersay).
- (v) His father begot at least one child out of marriege.
- (vi) Klers Poelzl, his mother, was Alois
 Hitler's second cousin once removed and sleo his ward (twenty-three years younger). Special permission from the Church had to be obtained before he could marry her.

- (vii) Angela Hitler, Adolf'a older halfaleter, ran a restaurant for Jewiah atudents in Vienna.
- (viii) Paula Hitler, Adolf's younger sister, was the miatraes of a Viannese Jaw for a while.
- (ix) A cousin of Hitler's is feable-minded, most of the other members of his else are ignorant, illitarate, or mentally retarded. He himself had to repeat the first year of Realschule (Technical High School) end feiled to graduate.

Thus, Hitler has apent a good pert of his life curaing and condemning people who belong to his layer of society, who resembla members of his own clen, who have characteristics similar to his own. On the other hand, the ideal he has set up, the person he pretends to be, is the exact opposite of all this. We have a fairly clear case, then, of Counteraction against inferiority fealings and aelf-contempt. Between 1908, when he left, and 1958, after the Anschluss, Hitlar naver vicited his home, and never communicated with his relatives (except in the case of his halfsister Angela). Utilika Napoleon, he did not carry his family along with him as he ascended to the heighte of power. In thie we see a Rejection of his pest self and family connections.

- egocentriam has slwaya been so marked; he has been such a Bohsmisn, if not s lone welf, in many phases of his carser that his undoubted devetion to Germany strikes one as most unusual. Since this devotion began at an early age and was the factor, more than any other, which docided that he would become a supreme success rather than an utter failure, it is worth while noting here the forces so far mentioned which brought about this intense insociation:
- (i) Influence of Ludwig Poetsch, his teschor, who, serving as a substitute father, glorified the history of Germany and presented Biamark'e Reich as an ideal.
- (ii) Influence of s strong nationaliat association among Hitler's classamates.
- (iii) Cathoxis of power. The figures of Froderick the Grest, Bismarck and othera offered batter fool of admiration than did Austrian harces.
- (iv) Inacciation with a more powerful nation satisfied his youthful prida, raised his status in his own eyes, and allowed him to reject his inferior Austrian self.

- (v) Heightened cathexie of an object behind a barrier. This is a general principle: that en individual will idealize en object that he can not quits attain -- so near but yet ac fer. In this connection it is interesting to note that the great majority of dictstors have not been netives of the country that they came to dominste. Hitler's continued sympathy for Germans outside the Reich is evidently a projection of his own self-pity as an Ostmarkien.
 - (v-1) (Memel returns to the Reich) I thereby lead you back into that home which you have not forgotten end which has never forgotten you. (M.N.O. 614).
- (vi) Displecement of defiance against the father. By identifying himself with Germany, the boy Adolf found an object even greater than his atern father, which permitted him to give vent to his frustrated rebelliousness egainst his Austrian parent.
- (vii) Germany es e substitute mother.

 In view of the press rejection suffered in childhood, it is likely -- and much evidence for this hypothesis will be presented letsr -- that Germany represented e kind of foater perent. It is even possible that Hitler es a child entertained a foster parent fantaey.

He apeaks of being Bavarian by blood, a statement for which there is no known justification. This point will be fully discussed leter in describing his devotions to Germany's cause in 1918, the hour of her despest humilietion. In many pleces Hitlsr spocks of Germany in words that one might use in speaking of a beloved woman:

- (vii 1) ...the longing grew atronger to go there (Germany) where since my early youth I had been drewn by secret wishes and secret love.
 (M.K. 161).
- (vii 2) What I first had looked upon as en impassable cheam now apurred me on to a greeter love for my country than ever before. (M.K. 55).
- (vii 3) Heiden, quoting from Hitler: The hundreds of thousands who love their country more than anything else must slac he loved hy their country more than anything else.
 - (vii 4) I eppeel to those who, severed from the motherlend, have to fight for the holy treasure of their language...and who now in painful emotion long for the hour that will ellow them to return to the erms of the heloved mother...
 (M.K. 161).

The common expression for Germans ie Fatherland, hut Hitler very often substitutes Motherland, He apeeks of "the common motherland," "the great German motherland." "the German mother of all life". This is not unnatural, einco he, once a very dependent adolescent, was left panniless end unbefriended after the death of hie mother. We are not surprised, therefore, to find him epeaking of being removed "from the emptiness of an essy life. that it took the milkaop out of hie downy neat end gave him Dame Sorrow for a foster mother" and speaking also of the time "when the Goddees of Micery took me into her arms". It is reported that he was mothered by several older ladies in his early Munich days and seemed to find comfort in such reletionshipa. In 1920, for exemple, he found a sort of home with Freu Hoffman. He always had to send her, socording to Heiden, his latest portrait, on which he would write, for example: "To my dear, faithful little Mother, Christmae, 1925, from her respectful Adolf Hitler."

B. VIENNA DAYS

1908 - 1913

The chief fects pertinent to the present analysis are thesa:

- 1. Klara Hitlar was operated on for cancer of the breast in the sarly summer of 1907. On December 21, 1907, ehe died. Two months before her death, Adolf Hitler went to Vienna and was examined by the Academy School of Art. He failed. He moved to Vienna in the winter of 1908, and the following October presented himself again at the Academy. But the drawings he brought as illustrations of his work were considered so lacking in talent that he was not allowed to take the examination. He was told he would make a better erchitect than painter, though he himself reports that he was a better colorist than draftaman.
- 2. Some account of these years has been given us by Hanisch, a "bum" from Bohamia who befriended him. They were fellow members of the same hostel, or flophouse. The first thing Hitler said to Hanisch sounds like a projection of (1) press Rejection and (2) press Aggression. He said (1) his landlady had dispossessed him and now he was without shelter, and

- (2) he had bagged a drunksn man for a faw pennies but the latter had raised his cane end insultad him. Hitlsr was vary bittar about this.
- 3. Hitlsr wora s beard during this period and in his long overcost looked vsry much liks a certein type of Oriental Jaw not uncommon in Vianna. Hitler had a number of Jswieh acquaintances and sold postoarda that he painted to Jswish dealars. There was no avidance during these first years of any hostility to Jews. Only later, after he had listened excitedly to the spacehes of the anti-Semitic mayor, Luegar, did he become an avowed, and somewhat later a fanatical, Anti-Ssmits himself.
- 4. Hitler was sxceadingly lazy and procrastinating in doing his little water colors during these days.

 He was much more intsrested in haranguing the other inmatss of the hoatsl on the subject of politics.

 Already he had vagus notions of founding a party.
- 5. He devoted some time to thinking up little devices for making money through trickery. According to one informant, his neme is in the Vienna police records as having been accused of theft, and it is suggested that his departure for Munich in 1913 was prompted by a desire to avoid serving a term in jail.

REPRODUCED AT THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

- 6. Hitler's friendehip with Hanicoh came to en ebrupt end when he socused the letter of stealing money from him. This has the flavor of a typical Hitlerian projection.
- 7. Heniech reporte that Hitlar's love for Germany end his hate for Austria ware vociferously expressed on ell occasions during these years.
- 8. Hitler was shocked by what he sew of sexual practice in Vienne. Haniech apeake of hie having e purity complex.
- 9. According to one informant, Hitler ie down in the police records of Vianna as a sax parvert.
- 10. In 1913, Hitler left Vienne end entered that country of which he had long yeerned to be a citizen. He became e recident of Munich.
- ll. The prese of Rejection is parhaps the outetanding feeture of the Vienna period. There was in the first place the rejection by the Acedamy of Arts, which Hitler felt was besed on his inadequate education.
 This left e resentment against intellectuale generally which was never etilled. The following excerpt sums up his conclusions on this point.

REPRODUCED AT THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

(i) Generally, it is the children of higher place, momentarily well-to-do parants who in turn are deemed worthy of a higher education. Hereby questions of talent play a subordinete rôle.

Many other passeges speak eloquantly of insults to his pride received at the hands of the privileged world of the gay capital.

- (i) ...the graciously patronizing sttitudes of s certain pert of the fashionable world both in skirts and trousers) whose 'sympathy for the people' is at times as haughty es it is obtrusive and tactless.
- (ii) Vienns, the city that to so many represents the idea of harmless gaicty, the festive place for merrymaking, is to me tho only living memory of the most miserable time of my life.
- as he was, penniless among the penniless of the lower class, he himself experienced, and he was in close touch with others who experienced, the beaic wants and viewpoints of the depressed viotime of civilization. Here, certainly, was much food for thought. He also attended sessions of parliament and numerous political mass meetings, and observed the proceedings of titelly. From the start he was constantly procedured with the question: why does this political movement fail and that one succeed? It was naturel for him to think reelistically and stratogically; not to make the common mietake of supposing men to be better than he is, and yet taking full account of his heroic potentialities, having observed that millions of simple untutored men will gladly fight and eacrifice their lives for an ideal vividly presented. In addition, Hitler spent many hours in the public library looking over histories and books dealing with social questions. MEIN KAMPF proves that the young man from Linz who could not get through High School was capable of profiting by what he sew end read, and that these five years of drifting and irregular employment were by no means wasted. The flophouse and the beer hall were his Heidelberg and University of Vienna. He writes:

- (i) So in a few years I built s foundation of knowledge from which I still draw nourishment today. (M.K. 29).
- (11) At that time I formed en image of the world and a viaw of life which became the granite foundation for my actions. (M.K. 30).
- 13. For the Vianns pariod the oriticel question psychologically is thie: why did Hitler, living among the proletarist, find the developed ideology of communism repellent and the embryonic ideology of fascism spessing? The chief determinents of his choice, as they occur to me are these:

- (i) Hitler's father halonged to the lower middle class. Having moved one rung up the ladder hy years of effort, his pride compelled him to draw a sharp line between himself and those below him. No one has stated this principle of behavior better than his son:
 - (i 1) The reason for that which one could almost call 'hostility' is the fact that a social class, which has only recently worked its way up from the level of manual labor, fears to fall back into the old, but little estaemed, class, or at least fears heing counted in with that class. In addition, many remember with disgust the misery existing in the lower class; the frequent brutality of their daily social contacts; their own position in society, however small it may be, makes every contact with the state of life and culture, which they in turn have left behind, unbearable.

This explains why members of the higher social class can frequently lower themselves to the humblest of their fellow beings with lese embarrassment than seams possible to the 'upstarts'.

For an upstart is anyona who, through his own anergy, works his way up from his previous social position to a higher one.

Finally, this relentless struggle kille all pity. One's own painful scramble for existence suffocetes the feeling of sympathy for the misary of those 1sft hehind. (M.K. 31-32).

REPRODUCED AT THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

Brought up by such a father, it was natural for Adolf Hitler to envy end admire hie sociel superiors and look with contempt upon those of a lower station. As the American editors of MEIN KAMPF have put it,

- (ii) Hitler, conacious of belonging to a higher social easte than hie fellow-workere...instinctively retreate from the idee of eccepting solidarity with them. (M.K. 56).
- (iii) Hitler had already been identified for some years with the German Nationaliet movement and so hie unit of insociation (group identification and belongingness) was greatly threatened by the communiste; unit of ineociation, the manual workers of the world. The former would lead logically to a wer between nations, the latter to e war between classes. Communism were the greatest enemy of nationaliem.
- (iv) Psrallel to hie naturalietic sentiments was Hitler's enthueiaam for the military, a professionel class which is entipethetic to communiste generally. The former finds ite goal in Power and Glory; the latter in Peace and Prosperity.
- (v) Hitler had great reverence for the strong and contempt for the week end therefore favored a stratified ecoial system, e diotatorehip of the elits. There was no compassion in his makeup; he had little sympathy for the under-dog. His ideology was founded on the rise to power of nature's supermen involving relationships of dominance and submission smong men. Communism was founded on the notion of equality.

C. WAR EXPERIENCES

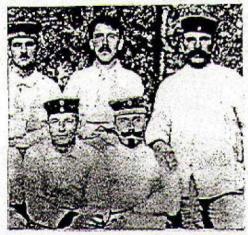

The record of these years is conflicting, but the following points ere probably true and pertinent to our theme.

- 1. In enlisting in the Army, Hitler become incorporated for the first time. Never before had he been an accepted member of a respected inetitution. This was not only a great relief to him, enabling him to forget the long series of paet failures, but it provided a ground for pride end e senee of security. At leet he and the German nation were one.
- 2. There is no evidence that Hitler was ever in a front line trench. It seems that he served as a meeeenger and was required to treverse ground that was being shelled by the enemy. Hitler, it appears, was quick to offer himself for dengerous tasks of this kind and was eaid to be an adept at running end then falling or seeking shelter behind some obstacle when the fire became intense. In this he showed coursge. There is no record, however, in the War Department of any epicode cuoh as has been described in connection with his winning the Iron Cross, First Order. Apparently he was swarded this medal efter he had left the Front, supposedly geseed in one of the lest offensives of the Allies.

- 3. Informante have commented on Hitler's merked subservience to the superior officers, offering to do their washing end perform other meniel tasks, courting their good graces to such en axtent that his comrades were disgusted.
- 4. Hitler was the only man in his company never to receive any mail or peckeges from home, and et Chrietmas end other occasions when the others were receiving gifts end messages he sulked moodily by himself. Here is enother instance of prees rejection.
- 5. It is hard to explain the fact that in four years of service he was not promoted above the rank of corporal. The comment by one of his officere that he was a neurotic fellow is the only explanation that has been sevenced.
- 6. It seems certein that Hitler was not gassed to eny eerious extent in 1918, but that he suffered from a war neurosis, hysterical blindness, which elso deprived him of his voice end perhaps his hearing. This psychosomatic illnses was concomitant with the final defeat of his Mother Germany, and it was after hearing the news of her capitulation that he had his vision of his task as savior. Suddenly his sight was restored.

Hitler with fellow patients at Pasewalk, 1918

- 7. In 1918 Hitler, the soldier, became very disturbed at the surprising success of Allied propaganda and then occurred a reaction that was typical of his whole character, namely, to admire and then to acquire the technique powerful opponent.
 - (i) We had a chance to become acquainted with the incredible disciplines of our opponents propaganda, and still today it is my pride to have found the means...for beating finally its very makers. Two years later I was master in this craft.

REPRODUCED AT THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

D. POST-WAR HISTORY

1919 -

Prom 1919 to the present Hitler's doings ere less obscure than for the periods so fer reviewed. A great many of the facts ere a matter of common knowledge end we will not review them in this section here. A few points, however, ere worthy of being highlighted.

- 1. For e year or two efter his release from the militery hospital, Hitler was more or less footloose, "a strey dog looking for a mastar," according to one informant. Undoubtedly there were more instences of press rejection to embitter him.
- when his superior officer, discovering his shility in public speeking, essigned him the task of indoctrineting the soldiers with the desired ideology. Later he was seked to speek to a civilian group. This success snooureged him to go further end enter politics for life. Hitler's reslization that he had the power to sway large masses of people was the sacond crucial factor, next to his revalation in the hospital while blind, in determining his career. His phenomenal success hinged on his mass-rousing telent.

3. After hearing Feder apeak, Hitlar was prompted to join a small group that called itself the National Socieliet Workers Party. Within a year he was its moving spirit and sole leader, and it might fairly be said that he was its oreator as it now exists, the difference between its atatus before he joined and soon afterwards being so great.

No doubt Hitler had been making apaches in fantesy eince his boyhood and had done a good deel of informal haranguing throughout this whole period, firet ae the adolascent ringleader of the young Nationaliete at school, second as a hem politician among the derelicts of the Vienne aluma, and third as a corporal behind the lines, but his sudden emergence as a spiritual force during the period 1921 - 1923 brought him into a much magnified aphera of sctivity which was qualitatively different. A selection from MEIN KAMPF, which is unquestionably autobiographical in reference, might be quoted here as a hint of how the transformation was apperceived by him:

In the monotony of evaryday life even important people often asem unimportant and they hardly atend out over the average of their surroundings; but as eoon as they are faced by a aituation in which others would daepsir or go wrong, out of the plain average child the inganious nature grows visibly, not infraquently to the astoniahment of ell those who hitherto had en opportunity to observe him, who had meenwhils grown up in the smallness of bourgeois life, and therefore, in consequence of this process, the prophet has rarely any honor in his own country. Never is there e better opportunity to observe this then during war. In the hours of distress, when others despair, out of apparently harmless children, thers shoot suddenly heroes of death-defying determination and icy occlnese of reflection. If this hour of trial had never come, then hardly anyons would ever have been able to gusss that e young haro ie hidden in the besrdlsss boy. Nearly always euch en impetua is needed in order to call geniue into ection. Fats's hammer stroke, which then throws the one to the ground, suddenly strikes eteel in another, and while now the shell of averyday life is broken, the erstwhile nucleus liea open to the eyes of the astonished world. (Y.K. 402-3).

4. It seems olser that it was (1) the defect of Germany and (2) the opposition against which he had to strive that acted as instigetors to his behavior from then on, which bacame more and more aggressively dominant. The idee of being a revolutionary was a necessary impatus to ection.

We Netional Socialiats know that with this opinion we stend as revolutionaries in the world of todey, and that we are brended as such. But our thinking and acting must not bs determined by the appleusa or the rejection of our time. (M.K. 595-5).

5. Hitler was ohiefly attracted during these early years to a homosexual, Ernat Roehm, a auperior officer with an upperclass background. The physical strength and sociel essurance of Roehm were much envied and, to have the political backing of euch a figure, gave Hitlar a sense of security.

- 6. Up to the famous Munich Putsch, 1923, Hitler was conspicuous in his worship of and flattsring subservisnoe to ranking officers in the Army, especially in these days in his relations with General Ludsndorff, but from 1924 on, although he never entirally lost a cartain ambarrassment in the presence of his former superiors, there was a change from abasement to dominance and even arrogance in dealing with aristocrate and war lords.
- 7. The chief points in his political program were these:
 - (a) wiping the Versailles Treety off the books.
 - (b) denish of war guilt,
 - (o) resurrection of Germany es a military power of the first order,
 - (d) militaristic sxpansion, dominated by the motivs of revspgs sgainet the Allies, and
 - (e) Anti-Semitiam. Soon afterwards
 - (f) the purification of the German people by a veriety of hygienic messures was added as an essential sim or policy.

- 8. During the years from 1923 and 1933, Hitler's emotional outburete, his tantrums of rage and indignation, his spells of weeping and threats of self-snnihilation increased in frequency and intensity. This can be partly accounted for by the fact that they were effective in bringing his associates around to his point of view. Instand of antegonizing the group of revolutionists who with him were plotting to usurp power, these frightful orgies of passion served to intimidate tham. Everyone sought to avoid topics that would bring about the fits.
- 9. Among the reasons given in extenuation of the cold-blooded purge of 1934 were (a) that the victims were diegusting homosexuals and (b) that they were plotting to enatch the power and supersade him.
- periodically arisen and spraad to the effect that Hitler was enamoured of this or that young woman; most of these were either fabricated for one reason or another or prematura, since the appeal that oertain women, of the stage particularly, had for Hitler wee generally short-lived. The one affair that etends out is that with a nineteen-year-old Angala

(Geli) Raubal, hie niscs. Hitler was often in her company and was pathologically jealous of any attantions shown har by other men. Two informents have steted positively that Hitler murdered the girl, but the officiel report was suicide. Whichever etory is correct, however, we gain the impression of a peculiar and stormy relationship. Rumora have it thet Hitler's aexual life, such as it is, demands a unique performance on the part of the women, the exact neture of which is a state secret.

Il. A great deal has been made in Germany of Hitlar's seceticiem, but this, when you come down to it, amounts to a vegetarian diet, served him by the bast chef in the Reich, and a great variety of soft drinks in place of hard liquor. It is said that he did not permanently give up meet until after the death of his misca Geli.

V. PERSONALITY STRUCTURE

A. BGO. SUPEREGO. AND ID

1. Ego

According to the criteria wa are accustomed to use in measuring ego etrength and structura, Hitler's ego is surprisingly weak. Hare we are of course using the term ego to apply to an institution of the personality (not to narciesism, or salfesteem). Hitler is conspicuously low in the following powers:

- (e) Deficient ability to organize and ocordinate hie efforts.
- (i) During his boyhood, especially at the time he was living se an indulged youngstar in his mother's apertment, Hitler's ectivities ware markedly irregular and eimless. He was unable to apply himself except when his impulse prompted him to do so.
- (ii) Hanicoh reports that in Vienna Hitler was never an ardent worker, was unable to get up in the morning, had difficulty in getting started, suffered from paralysis of the will. He always stopped work the moment he had sarned a little money, explaining that "he must have some liesure, he was not a coolie".

- (111) According to Rauechning, "He does not know how to work etaadily. Indeed, he is incapable of working. He gets ideas, impulees, the realization of which must be feveriably achieved and immediately got rid of. He does not know what it is to work continuously. Everything about him is 'apaem', to use a favorite word of his.
- (iv) Although Hitler prescribes disciplined order of work for those about him, he himself lives like an artist or Bohemian. His habite are as erratic and irragular as his temper. He may go to bed at seven P.M. or four A.M., getting up at seven or at noon. He is rarely punctual.
- (v) According to Rauechning again,
 "Hitler seems a man of tremendous will power, but the appearance is deceptive. He is languid and apathetic by nature, and neede the atimulus of nervous excitement to rouse him out of chronic lethergy to spasmodic activity..."
- (b) Deficient ability to resolve conflicts.
 Hitler has always suffered from periods of indecisiveness and mental confusion that incapacitate him to the axtent of being unable to make any decision or come to any conclusion. Then quite suddenly his inner voice will speak, but as a rule, not until the situation has become threetening. As Roshm says, "Usually he solves suddenly, at the vsry last moment...

only because he vacillates and procraetinstes."

- (c) Deficient ability to control emotion.

 Hie tantrume have been often described, and even thought it be admitted that Hitler has a capacity to turn them on end off es he sees fit, still, such unmanly display of infantils intolerance to fruetration, of teers and shrisks, is entirely out of keeping with his own ideal of the Iron Supermensch.
- (i) Rauschning: "My own experience of him and what I have learned from others indicate a leck of control amounting to total demoralization."
- (d) Deficient objectivity.- Distortion of human behavior and social evente by frequent projectione giving rice to delusione of all sorts.
- (e) Disjunctivity of thought and speech.
 All of Hitler's writings and reported speeches exhibit a disorganization of ideas and verbal expression which at times verges on the pathological.
- ahown any capsoity to parocive or admit his errora and defecte. Part of this is a conscious determination to follow the policy of denying them, this being considered by him politically expedient.

- (g) Inability to keep his word and fulfill obligations.
- (1) It has been said that "Hitler discards with perfect ease everything that e moment before has passed so a fixed principle. Hie political ettitude is characterized by two things: first, an unbelieveble capacity to tell falsehood, and second, a quite disarming naivete, e total innocence of promises and assertions made only e moment before."
- (h) In contrast to these signs of weakness,

 Hitler is high, sometimes very high, on the following criteris:
 - (1) power to do what he wante to do and has the capacity to do,
 - (11) counts ractive restriving,
 - (iii) power to resist undesirable coercione from society,
 - (iv) power to resist dictatorship of conventional superego,
 - (v) initiative and self-sufficiency,
 - (vi) sbility to take responsibility and affectively direct others.
 - (vii) long apparceptive span (taking account of a distant future in making decisions.
- (i) The aituation may be briefly formulated by stating that Hitlar operates on the lamic energy rather than on conscious will and rational planning.Peacessed by functical passion he can accomplish things which those who act on cooler and more moderate plan fail to echiave. The ferce, in other words, comes from the id, and the age is used in its service. This combination is typical of the gangater; but Hitlar is different from the ordinary type, having some of the attributes of the romantic artist. He is a compound, say, of Lord Byren and Al Capone.

2. Id

Under the term id I am including all unconscious psychic proceess -- principally effective and conative processes which smerge suddenly without voluntary effort and take possession of the ego but elso unconscious intellective processes resulting in sudden judgmente and decisions. Such processes are an important part of every man's psychology. It is only when they play an unusually dominant rôle in determining action that we stress them. They are aspecially prominent in the intuitive type, Hitler being one of these. Hitler's sentiments in this regard conform to his behavior.

- (1) We must distrust the intelligence and the conscience and must place our trust in our instincts. We have to regain a new eimplicity. (Quoted by Rauschning).
- (ii) ... Over-educated people, stuffed with knowledge and intellect, but bars of any sound instincts...

(iii) ... Of secondary importance is the training of mental ebilities. (M.K. 513).

Hitler's basic eccumption, so Max Lerner points out, ie that there are no logical catagoriss in the perception of values but only en intuitionism that is ite own principle end ite own justification. He functions, in other words, ee does a creative artist, which is unusual in one who chooses politics es his field. It is his dependence on involuntery processes that gives rise to hie inebility to make decisions about a hundred end one little matters that come to him in the routine of his daily occupation. He must west upon the spirit.

(iv) In the subconscious the work goes on. It matures, sometimes it dies. Unless I have the inner incorruptible conviction: this is the solution, I do nothing. Not even if the whole perty tried to drive me to ection. I will not act; I will weit, no matter what happens. But if the voice speaks then I know the time has come to act. (Quotad from Rausohning),

Many ecquaintences have remarked on Hitler's periods of abetraction and revery. He "spent his time building castles in the eir", Hanisch reports. "I had the impression," writes Reuschming, "that he was not listening...his thoughts were fer ewey," Another informant, Roberts, believes that Hitler, wrapped up in his dreem world, is unewara of a large part of the practicel ectivities and even brutalities of hie perty. His movemente would be impossible without the continued cooperation of men like Goebbsle, Goering, and Himmler. Because of the tremandous downward pull of unconscious processes Hitler must often pull himself up by the bootstreps, as it were, to meet an amergency.

(v) I go my way with the certainty and security of e somnembuliet.

Among id proceeses we should etrees particularly that dynamic pattern of energy bolted up in him which we call the unity end orienting themas. This compound of motivations, which amounts to e monomaniacal ides, will be fully described latar. It ie e rigid, faneticel, and incurable recervoir of the thalemic energias which, on releess, have two or thras timee tha potency that a normal man bringe to beer upon any ons reasonable object. The ego is in colleboration with thie unconscious complex, operates in its service, and oen, within limite, call it into pley or ohsck it momenterily. On eppropriate occesions, indesd, Hitler makes good use of his capacity to be possessed by the complex. He dramatizes it, whipe it up, and intoxiceted by the words that pour out of his mouth, deliriously givee vent to hie paesion.

Also characteristic of one who so reedily acquiesces to the demi-urge is Hitler's superstitiousness, his feeling that he is en object of divine protection, his tendency to interpret etriking events as eigns or omene of success or feilure. Like many a religious leeder he is said to hear voices and see spirite. Here we would compere him to Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism, the chief difference being that Smith's voices gave him permission to free the sex instinct, wherese Hitler's voices encourage brutality end destruction. Hitler also beare comparison to Mary Baker Eddy.

what has been seid that Hitler has manifested many features of the hysteroid type of make-up. Beeides the definitely recorded hysterical attack of blindness end aphonie (in 1918), there are his paroxyams of emotion, his hallucinations, coming out of nightmares, his sudden revelations and haering of inner voices, and the periode of day-draaming end abetraction, ell of which are reminiscant of hysterice, inepired and uninspired, of which the history of religion furnishes so many striking examples. Here he might be likened, perhaps, to Joan of Arc.

olear as we go on that Hitler is possessed by a complete semi-dalusional system characteristic of parancid schizophrenia. Beside this, many of the symptoms which have been listed in the previous paragraph under hysteroid personality are also typical of schizoid etates. The enormous banked-up hate and revengefulness in the man and the sots of crualty which he is able to execute apparently without the normal recriminations of conscience are also symptomatic of schizophrenia.

Although it might be said that Hitler is an hysteric on the verge of schizophrenia, and this may be trusr today than it was a while ago, still it must be acknowledged that conditions in Germany have been such and the man'e success in imposing his delusional system on his fellow countrymen has been so phenomenal that he has remained within the boundaries of technical sanity.

3. Superego

It seems clear that Hitler is not an amoral bruts like Goering or the majority of his followers, that is to say, his close followers. He has a superego but it is repressed, the mechanisms of the ego being act up against its interference. The conditions that usually pravail might be described as an alliance between the ago and the instinctual forces of the id against the dictates of the superego. A great deal of endopsychio energy is wrapped up in this affort to repress and deny the superego and the guilt feelings that it gives rise to. Its activity, however, can be judged by (1) the vehemence of his affirmations of brutality (and thus his danial of coneciance), (2) the justifications that he feele called upon to give when his actions are particularly repellent to the conecience of his world, and (3) cartein symptons that are generally recognizable as indications of unconscious superego activity.

Surely Hitler is epaaking of himealf as wall as of others when he writes:

(i) Only when the time comes when the race is no longer overshadowed by the consciousness of its own guilt, then it will find internel peace and external energy to cut down regardlessly and brutally the wild shoots, and to pull up the weeds.

That Hitlar asee himself as the dastroyar of an antiquated Habraic Christian auperego is shown by meny pessages:

(ii) I sm freeing men from the restrainte of an intalligance that has taken charge; from the dirty and dagrading modifications of a chimera called conscience and morality, and from the demands of a fraedom and personal independence which only a very few can bear.

- (Mi) We must be ruthless. We must regain our clear conscience as to ruthlessmess. Only thus chall we purge our people of their softness and sentimental Philistinism, and their degenerate delight in beer-swilling.
- (iv) I recognize no moral law in politice.
- (v) Conscience ie e Jewish invention. It is e blemiah like circumcision.

Obviously Hitler is posing here as the Nietzschean Anti-Chriet who is going to create a new euperego for mankind, the exact antithesis of that which has prevailed since the establishment of Chriatianity. Thie poae, however, is for the benefit of his close. followers such as Rausohning, who has recorded tha above assertions. "Moral commonplaces." he affirms. "are indispensible for the masaes. Nothing ia more mistaken than for e politicien to pose aa a non-moral euperman." The tenor of many of Hitler's public speeches, however, proves that he has not entirely conquered his superego, acquired during early yeare under the influence of his pious mother, tbe Catholic monestary at Lambach, and his teachers at school. The following may be taken as examplee of an unquiet congcience:

- (vi) It (Storm Troop) did not want to establish violence as its aim, but it wanted to protect the messengers of the spiritual aim against oppression by violence. (M.K. 790).
- (vii) However, 1 did not wish to carry out my purposes by force, instead 1 did my utmost to accomplish my purpose by persuasion alone.
- (viii) It never has been my intention to wage wars, but rather to build... (M.N.O. 836).
- (ix) I forbsde the sacrifice of more human lives than was sbeclutely necessary. (Speaking of the war with Poland. M.N.O. 723).

There is no question that Hitler succeeds in repressing hie superego moet of the time. He has consciously and openly committed most of the crimes on the calender, so much so that the disgnosis "peyohopathic personality" or "moral imbecils" seems almost justified; however, there are many indications that a superego of sorts operates unconsciously. After the bloody purge of 1934, for example, it is said that he was not able to sleep quietly for weeks. At night he prowled restlessly up and down. His dépressions and fearful nightmares can be explained in part as resultants of disquieting guilt feelings. Also to be included in this category are his frequent thoughts of suicide. These are often svowed, to be sure, with the purposs of impressing his closa followars, but thay are also in conformity with an unconscious tandency. According to our hypothesia, in fact, we would attribute a good many of Hitler's later ects of aggression to his superego. They are crimes to appaase conscisuca. Having once atarted on s caraer of brutality, he can only quiet the pain of a bad conscience by going on with ever greater ruthlessness to achisve successas, and so to damonatrata to himself and others that God approves of him and his methods. This dynamism, however, can work only in so far as his aggressions are auccessful; that ia, only good fortuns oac prove that conscience (snticipatory anxiety) was wrong -- there was nothing to be afraid of aftar all. Failure will undoubtadly ba followed by guilt feelings.

Further evidences of suparego activity can be found in the character of the projections as common in Hitler's speeches and writings, as we shall now show.

4. Ego Defence Mechaniems: Projection.

By far the most common form of defenes mechanism in Hitler's personality is that of projection. This worke in the esrvice of self-esteem. in blinding him both to hie guiltinese and to his inferiority. is no record of any case in which this process is used so often and so intensely. It operates eo promptly end coneistently, indeed, that by paying close attention to the objects that Hitler ecorns and condemne one gets a fairly accurate and compreheneive view of his own id. His case is rather unusual in that he has consciously adopted and furthered what was once no doubt a purely unconecious mechaniem. For example, he says, "As econ as by one's own propaganda even a glimpse of right on the other eide is admitted the cause for doubting of ons's own right is laid." The necessary corollary to this proposition would be: As soon as one a own wrong is admitted the cause for doubting the wrong of one's opponent ie laid. He also has enough knowledge to realize that accusations are evidences of guilt, for he ease, "If they now say that this is the signal that Germany now wante to attack the entire world. I do not believe that this is meent seriously:

such could only be the expression of a bed conscience."
-- a remarkable statement to be made by the world's greatest projector.

Two or thres illustrations would suffice to make plein the nature of Hitler's projections, but they represent such unique descriptions of himself that e lerger collection of examples will be of interest to psychologists.

wors a long opet given him by a Jewish friend, "en incredibly graaey darby on the beck of hie heed.

Hie hair was long and tangled, end he grew a beard on his chin euch es we Christiens seldom have, though one is not uncommon in...the Jewish ghettos...Hitler at that time looked vary Jewish, so that I oftsn joked with him that he must be of Jewish blood, sincs such a lerge beerd rarely grows on e Christien's ohin."

Compere this to Hitlar's eccount of the first conspicuously Jswish person he met in Vienne. "I suddsnly came upon a being oled in a long caften, with black curls. In this also a Jaw? we my first thought." Then he goes on to list the repellent treits of the Jaw: "Later the smell of these ceftan weerere often made me ill. Added to thie was their dirty clothes and their none too haroic appaarance."

Recalling Hitler's immorshity at echool and the fact that he is down (eccording to one informant) in the Vienna polios records as a sex pervert, the following statement is pertinent: "Aeide from the physical uncleanlinese, it was repelling suddenly to discover the moral blamishee of the chosen people."

- (i1) Hitler was charged with theft in Vienna, ecoording to one informant, and yet Hitler broke off hie friendship with Hanish by wrongfully accusing him of having misappropriated e water color of hie worth fifty Kronen.
- (111) In daily life Hitler oscillatee between sxtreme energy and utter listleesnese, and yet --

Hitler: "All passivity, all inertie...1s seneeleee, inimical to life."

(1v) Hitlsr has never admitted to being wrong. According to the Nazi oreed, Hitler is always right, and yet --

Hitler: "These impudent rascale (intellectuals) who alwaye know everything better than enybody else..."

"The intellect has grown eutocratic, and has become a disease of life."

(v) Hitler has often effirmed that he was governed by instinct end intuition rather than by reason.

Hitler: "The people...are eo so feminine in their nature and ettitude that their activities end thoughts are motivated less by sober considerations than by feeling and sentiment."

(vi) Roahm hae said: "He doeen't even seem to be aware how diehoneet he ie." By now the whole world agrees that Hitler ie a monumental liar.

Hitler: "What a reca (Jews): As such they have been nailed down forever...tha great maeters of lying."

(vii) Hitler has a way of etaring et people ac if he were attempting to hypnotize them.

Hitler: "They...tried to pierce me sven with their eyes. Innumerable faces were turned toward me with sullen hetrsd."

(viii) Hitler's favorite entertainment is to witness private performances of neked danoing.

Hitler: "Chicherin -- and with him e staff of over two hundred Soviet Jews -- visits the cebarete, wetchee naked dancers perform for hie pleasure..."

(ix) Below I have listed a miscellary of Hitler's statements which ere more accurate as descriptions of himself than they are of others.

- a. In such houre I had ead forebodings and was filled with a depressing fear. I wea faced by a doctrine (Social Democrats) consisting of egoiem and hatred; it could be victorious, following mathematical lawe, but at the same time it could bring ebout the end of menkind.
- b. Social Democrecy...directs a bomberdment of lies and celumnies towards the adversary who eeemed most dangerous, till finelly the nerves of those who had been ettacked give out and they, for the eake of paace, bow down to the hatsd enemy.
- o. They (opponente at Nazi meetings) reaembled e powder keg that might blow up at eny moment, and to which the burning fuse has been attached.
- d. For hie (the Jew'e) entire activity is unrestricted by morel obligations.
- e. I talkad until my tongue was weary and till my throat was hoarss... of the deetructivenees of their Marxist doctrine of irrationality.
- f. ...we will not let the Jews slit our gullete and not defend oureelves.
- g. (Jew)...the higher he climbs, the more alluringly riess out of the veil of the past hie old goal, once promised to him, and with faverish greed he watches in his brightest heada the dream of world domination etep into tangible proximity.
- h. They (Marxists) tegan to treat ue es genuine chief oriminels of humanity.
- i. For this pasce proposal of mine I was abused, and personally insulted. Mr. Chamberlain, in fact, spat upon me before the eyes of the world...

j. ...it was in keeping with our own harmleseness that England took the liberty of some dey meeting our pecceful ectivity with the brutality of the violent egoist.

k. ... the outstending feetures of Polish character were cruelty end leck of moral restraint.

The intensity end frequency of these projections emply justify the diegnosis of perenoid delucion.

5. Idaelego

The idaalego, es we define it, ie e compound of images, engendered in the mind of the subject, which represent what he would like to be, hie level of aepiretion, his beet self et the height of his cereer, the man recohing the goal of his embition. The ideelego may be the figure of e master criminal or that of a greet benefactor or prophet, its exect neture being dependent upon a hoet of fectors etemming from the id, ego, and superego. In Hitler's cese it is clear that the ideelego is the dominant force of his conscious end unconscious life. We shall discuss it presently in connection with his major configuration of drivee end sentiments.

B. MAJOR CONFIGURATION OF OVERT DRIVES AND SENTIMENTS

As e rule it is difficult to demonstrate olear-cut integration of overt drives end sentiments in en individual, either (1) because the majority of people ers not integrated eccording to e vary fixed end consistent pattern or (2) because the configurations. such as they are, ere not wholly discernible, importent elements being repressed and unconscious to the subject. We use the term orienting theme to include both conscious end unconscious elements. In Hitlar's case, howsvar, it ie not expedient to make a distinction between the major configurations of overt drives and sentiments end the orienting thema, because the latter has been mede explicit in word end deed and is of a reletively consistent and obvious type. Hitler is one of that relatively few men who has lergsly lived out his fentesy. The main elemente of his major configuration ere the following:

1. Positive Cethexis* of Power

Hitler's eentiments in favor of power as opposed to ell forms of weekness may be divided into (a) cathexis of powerful nations and (b) cathexis of powerful rulers.

Positive cathexis = value, attrection, power to evoke love, respect.

Negetive osthexis = the reverse: power to evoke eversion, soorn, hate.

(i) Positive cathexis of powerful groups

The vsry first enthusiaam entertained by the boy Hitler was an admiration for Germany. We have slready noted his membership in the Nationalist movement as a school boy and liated the detarminants of this enthusiesm.
The following quotations will illustrate the peraletence of this attitude in later life.

- a. Hanisch: Hitler always took the Government's part...inverisbly epproved of all such violent methods as necessary for the State's sake.
- b. Hitler: In Vienna I continued as I had done before, to follow up sll events in Germany with the fisrcest enthusiasm, no matter whether political or oultural questions were concerned. With proud admiration I compared the rise of the Reich with the decline of the Austrian State. (M.K. 69-70).
- c. Hitler: Prussia, the germ cell of the Reich, was created by resplendant heroism and not by financial operations or commercial affairs, and the Reich itaelf was in turn only the most glorious reward of political lesdership and military deathdefying courage. (M.K. 201).

It was Hitlar, a love of power that attracted him to the history of Grest Britain.

d. Hitler: No nation has more carefully prepared ite economic conquesta with the sword with greeter brutality and defended it later more ruthlessly than the British. (M.K. 189).

e. Hitler: England did not conquor India by the way of justice and lew: she conquored India without ragard to that wishes, to the viewe of the natives, or to their formulations of justice, and, when necessry, she has uphald this suppremacy with the most brutal ruthlassness. (M.N.O. 103).

Hitler has always admired the ruling classes everywhere as opposed to the underprivileged.

f. Hitler: Our big industrislists have worked their way to the top by resson of their efficiency. In virtue of this selsction, which merely proves their higher race, they have a right to lad.

(ii) Positive cathexis of powerful individuals (rulers).

It is difficult to esy whether it wes the figure of a powerful individual or the vague sense of a powerful clase or nation that first excited Hitler's admiration, but certainly in the course of his life there have been a series of heroes who have stirred his enthusiasm and chaped his ego ideal. Among these may be mentioned his teacher of history, Ludwig Poetsch; that fervent anti-Semitic, Georg von Schoenerer; the Viennese mayor, Karl Lueger; Richard Wagner; Frederick that Great; Biemarck; the Kaiser; and Mussolini.

e. Hitler: It infuristed me even more than the Viennese Press... expressed its objections sgainst the German Kaiser...Such things mads the blood rush to my head.

- b. Haniech: He ssid...Wagnsr was e fighter, there wee more grestness and power in Wagner.
- o. Over Hitler's deek hangs a portrait of Praderick the Great, whom, of all Germany's historic characters, Hitler has chosen se his hero.
 - d. Heiden: Roehm's frank brutsl energy seemed to inspire s bliseful sense of escurity in Hitler.
 - s. Hitlsr: In those days -- I sdmit it openly -- I conceived the most profound admirstion for the great man... what will rank Mussolini among the great of this earth is the datermination not to shars Itely with Marxism.

The figure of power sdmired by Hitler is marked by courage, military valor, brutality, and ebasnoe of sympathy or compassion. It is characteristic of him to interpret humans feeling as weakness.

2. Nesd for Deference toward Power.

Differing from s good many other would-be diotators or revolutionists, Hitler displayed, and still to eome extent displays, a marked deference towards his superiors, exhibiting thereby, no doubt, a pattern that he was forced to sdopt in the presence of his overbearing father.

(i) Heidsn: Subordination he took seriously down to the emallest detsils: to respect one'e euperior officers, nsver to contradict, to submit blindly. Hitler displayed a servile solicitude for the clothes boote and food of his superior officers.

(ii) Strasser: Hitler's attitude towards the General was obsequious; he was in agreement with everything Ludendorff said.

Hitler and President Hindenburg on the Day of Potsdam March, 1933

Note the subservience of Hitler's bow.

(iii) Heiden: In the midst of the Munich Putsch Hitler exclaimed to Kahr in a hoarse voice: "Excellency, I will stand behind you as faithfully as a dog!"

(iv) Lamia: In the course of his peroration he came to speak of Generals Ludendorff and von Seeckt; at such moments he stood at attention and trumpeted forth the words "general" and "Excellency". It made no difference that one of the generals was on his side, while the other, von Seeckt, commander-in-chief of the Reichswehr, was his enemy; he abandoned himself entirely to the pleasure of pronouncing the high-sounding titles. He never said "General Seeckt", he said "His Excellency, Herr Kolonel General von Seeckt", letting the words melt on his tongue and savoring their after-taste. At this moment he was the typical professional sergeant.

3. Negative Cathexis of Weakness.

Hitler's sentiments in this category are the natural complement of his high positive cathexis for power. A few illustrations will suffice.

- (i) Hitler: A stronger generation will drive out the weaklings, because in its ultimate form the urge to live will again and again break the ridiculous fetters of a so-called "humanity" of the individual, so that its place will be taken by the "humanity" of nature, which destroys weakness in order to give its place to strength.
- (ii) Hitler: ...these upper layers (of intellectuals) lack the necessary will power. For will power is always weaker in these secluded intellectual circles than in the massa of the primitive people.
- (iii) Hitler: ...the Jewish Christ-Cresd with its effaminste pity-ethics. (Rausohning).
- (iv) Hitler: Anybody who is such a poltroon that he can't bear the thought of someone near by having to suffer pain had better join a sewing-circle, but not my party comradss. (Rauschning).
- (v) Hitler: Unless you are prepared to be pitiless, you will get nowhere. Our opponents are not prepared for it, not because they are humane...but because they are too weak. (Rauschning).

4. Idaalego, Powerful Individual.

The process involved here is merely that of the internationalization of the positivaly ontheoted powerful individual described above. What was once external become internal and was accepted as the goal of endeavor. Around this central notion of the powerful individual there has developed an ideology based on the so-called aristocratic principle in nature. The final conception is that of a super superman, leader of a nation of aupermen who govern the globe. This notion is deeply imbedded in the German character es e result of (1) the autocratic position of the father in German family structure; (2) eystematic indoctrination in the home and in the echoole; and (3) the position of Germany among the European nations, a powerful community encircled and for a long time eolipsed in power and glory by France and then Great Britain. The main source's of Hitler's idaology are such men ae Carlyle, through his life of Frederick tha Great, Gobineau, Wagner, Houston Stewart Chamberlain, Nietzeche, and Georgae Sorel (Reflexions sur la Violence). Not that Hitlar read all or even moet of these authors but their ideae were transmitted to him through various accondary sources which ha read eagerly and took to heart during his years in Vienna. The following quotatione give an outlina of Hitlar's philosophy.

- (1) Hitler: ...most important precondition in life -- namely, the necessity to be strong. (M.N.O. 525).
- (ii) Hitler, quoted by Rauschning: But fortune follows where there is a firm will.
- (iii) Hitler: Alwaye before God and the world the strongar has the right to carry through what he will. (M.N.O. 50).
- (iv) Hitlar, quoted by Rauschning: Brutelity ie respected. Brutality and physical strength. The plain man in the street respecte nothing but brutal strength and ruthlsssnsss. (N.B., Thie is an excellent example of self-projection and sums up in a nutshell the crux of Hitler's personality.)

- (v) Hitler: In the snd, only the urgs for self-preservation will sternally succeed. Under its pressurs so-called "humanity", as the expression of a mixture of atupidity, cowardice, an imaginary superior intelligence, will melt like enow under the March sun. (M.K. 175).
- (vi) Hitler: Every view of life... will remain without importance...unlsss its principles heve become the benner of a fighting movement. (M.K. 575).
- (vii) Hitlsr: Terror is not broken by power of mind but by terror. (M.K. 494-5).
- (viii) Hitlsr: The terror in the workehops, in the factory, in the assembly hall, and on occasions of mass demonstrations will always be accompanied by success as long as it is not met by an squally great force and terror. (M.K. 58).

5. Social Ideal, Powerful Folk.

one will not be able to understand Hitlsr's pareonality, its axtracrdinary force, its maintenance this eida insanity, and its influence on the German people without taking full account of his emotional identification with an ideal Germany as he conceives it and the dedication of his efforts to the creation of such a Germany. The principles of his program are expressed in the following series of quotations:

- (i) Hitler, quoted by Rauschning: There will be a Herren-Clase, an historical clase tempared by battle and welded from the most varied elements.
- (ii) Hitler: ... (The Folkieh view) faels the obligation in accordance with the Etarnal Will that dominates this universe to promote the victory of the better end etrenger, and to demand the submission of the worst end the weaker. (M.K. 580).
- (iii) Hitler: We racognize that freedom can starnelly be only a consequence of power and that the source of power is the will. Consequently, the will to power must be strengthened in a people with passionate erdor. (M.N.O. 24).
- (iv) Hitler: Hie (Youth'e) antire sducation and development has to be directed at giving him the conviction of being ebsolutely superior to the others. (M.K. 618).
- (v) Hitler: The parliamentery principle of decision by majority, by denying the euthority of the person and placing in ite stead the member of the crowd in question eince against the arietocratic idea of Nature. (M.K. 103).
- (vi) Hitler: We want to be the supportere of the diotatorship of national reason, of national energy, of national -- brutality and resolution. (M.N.O. 66).
- (vii) Hitler, quoted by Rauschning: Ons thing is and remains eternally the same: force. Empires are made by the sword, by euparior force-not by alliances.

What must be pointed out here ie (1) that Hitler oams in to Germany as an outsider (he was not reared in the system), (2) that he started spereting with a relatively simple, clear-cut, fanatically held conception of the proper social pattern, (3) that he started with e amall nucleus and built a repidly growing party according to his preconceived social ideal, (4) that this party usurped power and spread to include most of the nation:

(viii) Hitler: The N. S. G. W. P. must not be the masses' slave, but their maeter! (M.K. 698).

and, finally, (5) that Hitler's social ideal is not confined to the Garman people within the national boundary but to the German folk or race wherever they sre. It is a world dominion that he envisages by people that are constitutionally alike.

What we have here in the simplest terms is the Master-Sleve pattern of social relationships to the axclusion of all other patterns. What is most distinctive is not the presence of this idea, which is as old as the history of man, but the absence of other patterns, the complete aubatitution of contempt for sympathy.

6. Need for Dominance, Ruthless Will to Power.

Hitler's positive ostheostion of a powerful nation and e powerful ruler has been described, as well as his creetion of a sociel ideal in which Power was to be carried to its furthest point. His deference, even obsequiousness when face to face with representatives of power has also been described. What we have now to deel with is the problem of the gradual change . of smphasis from deference to dominance. We can say, I think, with some justification that if Hitler's ideal social pattern had existed in Germany, that the nation had been undar the dictatorship of en iron man, he might havs been willing to take his place in the system as a subordinats, just as he did as a corporal in the ermy, but the fsot that such e sociel pattern was not in opsration stimulated him to inaugurete it. He became dissatisfied with ons politicel leeder after enother, Kahr, Ludendorff, etc., end by degrees forced himself into the rols that according to his acheme acmebody must fill. It is es if a masochist, finding no one to pley a role sufficiently eedistic to gretify his eroticism, were to decide to adopt that rôle himself. We have to take account here of the possibility of vicerious pleasure in either rôle. Listaning to Hitler's words, we often get e certein sense of his identificetion with the sedist when he is adopting the aubmissive rols, and his identification with the masochiat when he is acting as a brutel tyrant. To explain the identification with the sadist, we must essume en slementary need for dominance, or will to power, which gets satisfied in this roundabout way. Anyhow, it is clear that as time went on during the years after World War I, Hitler's attitude underwant some modification. From the obtrusively submissive corporal he baceme the obtrusively dominant leader of e party.

2 .

(i) Heiden: ... (As time went on) he felt himself euperior to his recognized superiors. The obedient soldier was transformed into one who knew better, the undarling into one who could do things better.

This change was concomitant with Hitler's discovery of his own oratorical powers. He gave way more and more to the demon within him. The ambitious sadist, his infantile belief in omnipotence being recotiveted by the hystsrisal epprovel of the masses, osme into his own. We are decling here with a personelity who enviously edmires his enemies. His enemies are those who dominate and oppose end frustrate him with force. He hates the person who embodies this force but he worships the force end ee so pettarns himself on the object of his hate. This explains why Hitler was attracted to the Marxists and their methods for gaining power.

(ii) Lerner: He went to school not only to the Marxists. He has a great edmiration for the organization and methods of the Catholic Church. He speaks again end egain of how much he learned by studying the propagands the British used during the war. And he expresses admiration for American advertising technique.

4 171 -

(iii) Hitler: We had e chance (during World War I) to become ecquainted with the incredible discipline of our opponents propagands. And still today it is my pride to have found the means...for beating finally its very makers. Two years later I was master in his oraft.

The picture we get here is that of a man who, like a greet number of Germans, entertains the conception of an iron man who will save Germany, and wondere at the same time whether he himself has not the necessary genius to be that iron man. As time went on, Hitler came more and more to identify himself with the hero, but even at the moment that he was approaching the very summit of his power he was overcoms with misegivings. Perhaps he was not this superman but merely the bridge to the superman, as Nietzeche often said of himself.

- (iv) Hitler: We eld ere, in a small way, like St. John (the Baptiet). I weit for Christi
- (v) Hitler, quoted by Rauschning: The new map is among us! He is here! Now are you satisfied? I will tell you a secret. I have seen the vicion of the new man -- fearless and formidable. I shrank from him!
- (N.B. Here is a suggestion that beyond the exercise of power there is a greater enjoyment -- shrinking before a still greater force.)

7. Identification with Idaelego.

A few quotations will be sufficient to show that extent of Hitler's identification with his own (and the average German's) idealego.

(1) Hitler, quoted by Russell:

Who won the campaign in Poland?

I didi

Who gave the ordere?

I did!

Who had all the strategio ideas which made victory possible?

I did!

Who ordered tha atteck?

Ich, Ich, Ich, Ich!

(11) Hitler, eddressing Schuschnigg, quoted by Fuchs:

Do you not reelize that you are in the presence of the greatest German everknown to history!

- (iii) Hitler: I am one of the hardest men Germany has had for decades, perhaps for centuries, equipped with the greatest authority of any Garman leeder...but above all, I balieve in my euccsss. I believe in it unconditionally. (M.N.O. 871).
- (iv) Hitler, eddressing the Supreme Commanders before the Polish campaign, quoted by Lochner:

In the last analysis there are only three greet stetssmen in the world, Stelin, I, and Mussolini ... our strength consiete in our apoed and in our brutality. Genghis Khan led millions of women and children to slaughter with premaditation end a heppy heart. History sass in him colely the founder of a state. It's a matter of indiffersnce to me what a weak western European civilization will say about me. I have issued the command -- and I'll have anybody who utters but one word of criticism executed by s firing squad -- that our war aim does not coneist in reaching certain lines, but in the physical destruction of the enemy, Accordingly. I have pleced my death-haed formations in readinees...with orders to them to eand to death mercileesly and without compassion, men, women, end children of Polish derivation and language.

Hitlsr sses himself not only es Germeny's greetest etrategist and war lord but as the chosen instrument of God, the savior of the German folk, end the founder of a new spiritual era which will endure, ee Chriet's kingdom was designed to endure, for a thousend yeers. It is not to be wondered et, therefore, that Hitler has often identified himself with Christ,

(v) Hitler: Therefore, I believe todey that I am acting in the sense of the Almighty Creetor: By warding off the Jews I em fighting for the Lord'e work. (M.K. 84).

Hitler: My feeling es a Christian points me to my Lord and Savior as a fightar. It points me to the man who once in loneliness, surrounded by only a few followers, rocognized these Jews for what they were and summoned men to the fight against them and who, God's truth; was greatest not see a sufferer but as a fighter. In boundless love as a Christian and as a man I read through the passage which tells us how the Lord rose at last in his might and seized the socurge to drive out of the Temple the brood of vipers and adders... I recognize more profoundly than ever before the fact that it was for this that He had to shed his blood upon the cross. (M.N.O. 26).

Hitler: When...I eee theee men etanding in their queuee..then I believe I would be no Christian, but a very devil, if I felt no pity for them, if I did not, as did our Lord two thousand years ago, turn against those by whom today this poor people is plundered and sxploited. (M.N.O. 27).

Hitler may very well have realized that he could not make of his physique anything very imposing or reeplendent. Perhaps it was en uncenny wiedom on his part that caused him to sdopt, or at least, retain, the appearance of a typical lower middle class men. Anyhow, he stands out among others of his type by an edherence to the uniform of a commonplace storm trooper or the vestments of an average citizen. He has not yielded to the temptation of dressing himself up in a fine uniform or in imperial robes as did Napoleon. After the war, he went about in jack-boots swinging a hippopotamus-hide whip and a pleetic surgeon has removed superfluous fat from his nose, and he has etudisd as consciously as any actor the walk, the gestures, end the manner suitable to his position; but still, despite these and many other efforts to create a satisfying visual impression, he has preserved certain modesties that have ingretiated him with certain classes in Germany. According to the legend, he is a humble ascetic man, and this holds, despite the known fact that in his study at the Berghof a huga portrait of himself as Fuehrer hangs over him eternally.

8. Nasd for Aggression, Sadism.

The Marquis de Sade maintained that his oruelties were not inflicted with the purpose of giving others pein but rather to increase to the utmost his own sense of power; thus, eccording to his version, aggression was subsidiary to dominance. In Hitler's case, however, although the will to power is the cantral principle, fusad with it is a vindictiveness which takes pleasure in the painful humiliation of his adversaries. Enough illustrations of the sediem mixed up with Hitler's need for dominance have already been given; we only need to point out here what is known the world over, namely, that his ideology of power has been expressed in definite actions of aggression, particularly against weaker, helplass individuals and groups. Statemente such as the following have been the precureors of unprecedented brutality:

- (1) Hitler, quoted by Rauschnigg: I chall spreed terror by the surprise employment of all my measures.
- (ii) Hitler, quotsd by Hsidsn: There will be no pesce in the land until a body is hanging from every lamp post.
- (iii) Hitlsr, quotsd by Rsuschning: But sven if we could not conquer them, we should drag half the world into destruction with ue, and leave no one to triumph over Germany. There will not be snother 1918. We shall not surrender.

An account of Hitler's parsonal aggressiveness against another man is given by Heidan:

(iv) (At the Munich Putsch) The first to be srrested was the Standard lasder, Count Spreti. The young Count was set in front of Hitler; he made e movement toward his pookst, as though to grasp his pistol. Thereupon Hitler reised hie whip, struck Count Spreti on the heed with the stout ironbound end, and threshed him on the face in blind fury until Count Spreti collapsed.

The purge of 1934, the enti-Semitic strocities, the unspeakehle crimee committed in Polend, these end meny other ections executed or ordered by Hitler demonstrate the extent of his sediem end revengefulness.

9. Need for Inecciation (Collective Identification)

Hitler's peychology cennot be understood if he is considered epert from his identification with the German people, or rether with hie ideel for Germeny. From the very beginning, we have evidence of hie desire to hecome e member of the Reich, which, to be sure, was more in the nature of e fentasied insociation with e veguely conceived tredition then it wee e desire for relationship with concrete individuels. Until he enlisted in the German Army, there ere no definitive inetances of his ever helonging to an organized group, unlese it wes a little Nationelist's Club in school. No doubt this long period of egocentric isoletion incressed his need for insocietion. We note that st school he showed tendencies to be an egitetor; end Henish tells ue that in Vienne he was continually talking up the idea of forming an essocietion among his flophouse friends for financial or political purposes. Although in a sense he was a lone wolf (he went by the name of Wolf), it was elso true that he had to have followers shout him.

One of the first thinge he created was a bodyguard and the creation of the National Socialiet Party was essential to hie achievement. Hitler ie inconceivable without the masses, but it was not so much the concrete individual party members whom we have in mind here. rather Hitler's conception of the German Volk, with whom in hie imagination he was identified. He believed. and the people believed, that he loved Germany, and if Germany is perceived in his terms there is no resson to doubt this dedication. Without this, he would have become a criminal or lived out his life as a futile and penniless painter of poetcards. It was this feeling of oneness with Germany and the fact that he could identify his revengefulnees with the need for aggression latent in the German nation which enabled him to hold hie ground this side insanity. Once the Party had conquered the German people, he could function corporocentrically rather than egocentrically. It was this that saved him and won him adherents.

10. Need for Creation (Social)

It was not Germany as it was or had been that Hitler represented but rather the ideal social pattern which he wiehed to impose on the country. Not only during his days of rumination in Vienna but latar it was necessary for him to construct an ideology from diverse sources in tarms of which he could preach to the peopla. None of the alemente were original with him but some inventiveness was required in developing the precise combination of principles that became the creed of the Nazi Party. Besides this, he was continually precocupied with inventing means to his goals, which involved a considerable amount of creative thought; thus, to a certain extent, ha functioned so a creative artist end carteinly conceived of himself es such.

(i) Hitler: Or must not the task of the leeding statesman be seen in the birth of a creative idea or plan in itself, rathar than in the ability to make the ingenuity of his plene understandable to a flock of eheep and empty-heads for the purpose of begging their gracious concent? (M.K. 101-102).

11. Need for Exposition.

Having arrived at his major policy, his ideological goal with its subsidiary sime, it was necessary to communicate these to the paopla, and so to create a Party and leter a nation dedicated to the achievement of the determined goal. Here the need for exposition took the form of writing MEIN KAMPF, but more especially the form of speech-making. Hitler is elequent in to the writer when it comes to immediate potency in instigating action. We must certainly rate the need for exposition as maximally strong in Hitler's personality. In boyhood he was already haranguing his schoolmates and his family. Likewise in Vienna and at Company Headquarters during the war, and everlastingly from then on he has continued to make speeches to real or imaginary audiences. His chief function, parhaps, as he conceived it, was to convert the German people to his way of thinking and thus to create the Germany that he was devoted to in his imagination.

One final point: insociation, creation, and exposition were fueed by Hitler's conception of himself as mouthpiece of the whole people. He was not creating an individualistic philosophy and imposing it on Germany, but rather, as he saw it, giving voice to the deepest needs and longings of the masses. Here the editors of MEIN KAMPF have something to eay:

(i) The lesder is hs who most strongly ssnsss the needs and desires of the unified nation, and not he who -- as Nietzsche and Stefan George believed -- makes use of the "slavas" in order to assure the triumph and happiness of a more regal aristocracy than the world has known. In short, for all his elements of patriotic mysticism, Hitler is no Platonist, but a Spartan in the simplest sense. That is why Germans have found it so difficult to resist him. As one of them has put it, "He flatters us all into acquiescance." (M.K. Note, 127-8).

In so far as Hitler conforms to thie rola, he is agocentric, corporocantric, and ideocentric ell at once.

12. Orienting Thema

Much avidance oould be brought to bear to demonetrate that Hitlar's anergiae would naver heve been fully involved if it had not baen for Germany'e defeet and collapse. Up to that time, he had political convictione, to be eure, but the sufficient stimulus was lecking. The critical point came, as was mentioned abova, whan he lay blind in the military hospital end made his vow to reinstata hia fallan motharland. Therefore, we would be inclined to put Hitler's orienting theme, tha plot of his active striving, in these words: The treacharous, overpowaring, and contaminating, the weakening and dapreciation, of a pure and noble object ia the tragic spactacle which arouses the haro and incitee him to agitata revenge. As Laader and Messiah, he compels the object, by sheer will and eloquance, to adopt a course of ruthlass aggraesion, the goal being to annihilate the contaminator and aggressor, and eo, guided by ite almighty ruler and redeemer, to become eupremely pura, powerful, and euperior, and thus everleetingly respected. His work done, the hero relinquishee power and dies, revered es the progenitor of an uncorrupted end mesterful rece thet will live on in fulfilment of hie word.

(N.B., The elements of purity end contamination will be fully diacueaed later.)

13. Leck of Need Affiliation, Need Nurturance.

Hitler's strong drives for aggressive dominence end self-assertion have been described. These ere the features of the men's personality which have attracted end shocked the world but what is more distinctive perhaps is not the presence of these all-too-human tendencies but the leck of opposing drives which in normal people belence and mitigate the evil effects of rampent egocentrism. Hitler has shown extraordinarily little ability to establish and maintain friendshipa, to edjust himself to the needs and wishes of other people end e minimum of aympethy for human suffering end affliction. Whetever tendencies of this sort he once possessed have been long-since trempled under foot.

C. MINOR CONFIGURATIONS OF NEEDS AND SENTIMENTS

Hitler is a peculiarly single-minded fanetic end the greeter pert of his energies have been caught up in the major configuration outlined in the previous section. Anyhow, other configurations and patterns of behavior ere of relatively little consequence in a summary analysis of this eart. Suffice it to mention:-

1. Need for Sex.

Although the Press has led the Germen people to believe periodically that Hitler had found the girl he was looking for all these years, a good many close observers have come to the conclusion that he is assaual. It is generally said that Germeny is his beloved, his mother and his wife, and that when he addresses the masses, whom he thinks of as feminine, he is courting, appealing to, completining to, and srouging the woman of his heart. That this is not entirely satisfying to his sex instinct will be indicated in a later section.

2. Need for Creetion (Architecture):

Hitler's smbitions to become an architect were frustrated by hie leck of education end telent, but since he has become supreme ruler of Garmany he has given free play to this interest. He has had a part in planning and designing a number of the recent buildings, system of roads, sto. This tendency is only of significance to ue in so fer see we can infer from the products of his mind estain underlying forces; therefore, we will postpone consideration of this side of his character until seletar section.

It should be noted here that Hitler's interest in erchitecture is very reel. It forms en sesential ingredient in hie system of sentimente. The evidence for this is not limited to his own etetements but is furnished by a close study of hie metephore. He epecke of erchitecture as the queen of the arte. No doubt peinting and architecture were connected to some extent with a certain voysuriem, but they also had other significances. The following pessege is suggestive of voyeurism:

(i) I hed eyss for nothing but the buildings...ell dsy long, from serly morn until lats at night, I ran from one sight to the next, for what ettrected me most of all were the buildings. For hours on end I would stand in front of the opera or admirs the Perliament Buildings; the sntire Ringetresse sffected me like a fairy tels out of the Arebien Nights. (M.K. 26-27).

In accordance with the conventions of aymbolic interpretation, it is possible to conceive of thesa impraesiva buildings as paychic equivalents of the mother whom he has loet. We are also reminded here of the unique claustrum which Hitler had constructed for himself on the top of the mountain behind his retreat at Berchtesgaden.

D. TYPE OF PERSONALITY STRUCTURE: COUNTERACTIVE NARCISM

The drivee, sentimenta, and traits ao far listad and discuseed -- Hitler's high idealego, hie pride, hie dominance and aggression, and his more or lesa euccaesful repression of the superego -- indicata that hie personality atructure corresponds to that of Counteractive Naroism. The implication of this term is that the manifest traits and symptoms of Hitler's paraonality represent a reaction formation to underlying fealings of wounded self-estsem. When one examines systematically the common manifestations of Counteractive Narciam, one finds that the majority of them are clearly exhibited in Hitler's behavior; therefore, by running over the list of these common characteriatics we can bring together eome loose ends and aubaume them all under one formulation. Hara wa ahall not attempt to be exhaustive but satisfy ourselves with some of the more typical manifestations.

- 1. Narcisenaitivity:- low tolerance of belittlement, depreciation, criticiam, contradiction, mockery, failure; inability to take a joke; tondency to harbor grudgee, not forgetting and forgiving.
 - (i) Haniech: Hitler could never stand any criticism of his paintings.
 - (ii) Hanisoh: Hitler could not stand to be contradicted. Ho would get furious. He couldn't restrain himself, would scream and fidget with hie hands.
 - (111) Rauachning: He looked round apprehenaively and suspiciously, with searching glances at us. I had the impression that he wanted to see if anyone was laughing.
- 2. n Recognition (Self-Exhibition):- aolf-display; extravagant demanda for attention and applause; vainglory.
 - (i) Hitler's appoarance at meetings and rallies are dramatized to the fullest extent. Ho is careful to have electric lights shining on him in such a way as to produce the most striking effects possible, etc., etc. However, one geta the impreasion the exhibitionism is limited to talking before a crowd -- at which times it is extremo -- but that ordinarily he is self-conscioua and ill at ease, and does not particularly enjoy showing himself in public, although he must do this to maintain his power.
- 3. n Autonomy (Freedom): self-will; to insiat on a sufficient area of liberty, on free thought, speech and action. Reaistance or defiance in the face of force-ful coersions or restraints; to combat tyranny.

- (i) It is said that Hitler was unruly as a youth, intolerant of frustration. After his fathor's death he was given his own way and after leaving echool became increasingly resistant to rules and regulations. He was never able to hold a job. He wanted to be an artist and live like s Bohemian. We must therefore place him high on this variable although in him it does not take ita usual form (defensive individualism), due to his political ambitions -- Hitler needed the alliance of the massee.
- (ii) Hitler: The thought of being a slave in an office made me ill; not to be master of my own time, but to force an entire life-time into the filling in of forme.

 (M.K. 12).
- (iii) Heiden: Feder...also said that the Fuehrer must be educated in systematic work. For this purpose he had selected an officer, who was to serve Hitler as secretary, to map out the day's work according to the clock and, in general. to introduce order and a programme into the Fuehrer's activity. When Hitler heard this, he banged his fist on the table and ehouted, "Who do those fellows think they are? I shall go my own way, as I see fit." But he accepted the secretary.
- 4. n Dominsnce (Self-Sufficiency): When one is in a position of authority, to plan and make decisions without consulting others; to refuse to change an announced decision; to resent disagreements and interferences; to be annoyed by opposition; to inaist on being sole ruler of one's province -- home, business, political party, nation.
 - (i) Heiden, quoting Hitler: I am not contending for the favor of the masses...I slone lead the movement, and no one can impose conditions on me so long as I personally bear the responsibility. And I once more bear the whole responsibility for everything that occura in the movement.

- 5. Rafusal of Subordinate Position: to avoid, refuse, or leavo a position which does not do justico to one's felt powers or accomplishments; to want the first place or nothing (fusion with n Autonomy).
 - (i) Hitler's refusal to accept membership in the Cabinet in 1932. He insisted on complete power.
- 6. Reluctance to Admit Indebtedness: to be disinclined to express gratitude or acknowledge help recoived, to deny or minimize the contribution of others.
 - (i) Rauschning: Hitler has always been a poseur. He remembers thinga he has heard and has a faculty of reposting them in such a way that the listener is led to believe that they are his own.
- 7. Counteractive Achievement: persistent efforts in the face of unexpected obstacles; or restriving after a defeat; or repeated and enduring attempts to overcome fears, anxietiea, deficiencies or defects; efforta to defeat a once successful rival.
 - (i) Heiden: When others after a defeat would have gone home despendently, consoling themselves with the philosophic reflection that it was no use contending against adverse circumatances, Hitler delivered a second and s third assault with sullen defiance. When others after e success would have become more cautious, because they would not dere put fortune to the proof too often and perhape exhauat it, Hitler persisted and staked s bigger claim on destiny with every throw.

- (ii) The very first condition for such a manner of fight with the weapone of pure force ie, and will slways be, perseverance... As soon as intermittent force siternstes with indulgence, the doctrine to be suppressed will not only recover again and sgsin, but it will be sble to drsw new values from every persecution... Only in the eternally regular use of force lies the preliminary condition to success. (M.K. 222).
- 8. n Rejection (Verbal Depraciation): to belittle the worth of others, especially if they be euperiors, rivals, and potential oritics (fusion of verbal Rejection and Aggression).
 - (i) Rsuschning: Hitler distruste everyone who tries to explain political economy to him. Re believes that the intention is to dupe him, and he makes no secret of his contempt for this branch of science.
 - (ii) Hitler: My mind wse tormented by the question: Are these still human osinga, worthy of being part of a great nation? A torturing question it was...(M.K. 54).
 - (iii) Hitler: ...it brought me internal happiness to realize definitely that the Jew wae no German. (M.K. 77).
 - (iv) Hitler: ...armed in one's mind with confidence in the deer Lord and the unshake-eble stupidity of the bourgeois. (M.K. 585).

- 9. Counteractive Aggression: to repay an insult in double meeture -- e tooth for a tooth; to revenge an injury; to ettack opponents, auperiors, and frustratora.
- (i) Verbal: to eccuse, condemn, curee, demn, depreciete, or mock en enemy to his fece, or behind his back by criticism, slander, subtle undermining of prestige, smear campeigns, etc.

There ere hundreds of illustrations of this. It is Hitler's conviction that: "One oen only succeed in winning the soul of a people if, apart from e positive fighting of one's own for one's own eime, one also destroys at the same time the supporter of the contrery." (M.K. 458).

(ii) Physicel: to ettack or kill the depreciating, injuring or frustreting object.

Purge of 1934, Anti-Semitism, Wers, etc.

- 10. Intradeference (Complience): obedience to own intuitions and impulses; self-truet; fidelity to own feelinge, sentiments, testes, judgments, experiences.
 - (1) Hitler: But I knew just the eame that my place would be there where my inner voice directed me to go.
 - (ii) Hitler: Nothing will move me to go another way but the way which experience, ineight, end foresight tell me to go. (M.N.O. 374).
 - (N.B., Illustrations of this ere plantiful; ase Id.)

- 11. Creation and Cathection of an Idaslego:satisfaction with one's ideal, with the height of one's aspirations; identification with this ideal.
 - (i) Many illustrations have been given under Idealego and Identification with Idealego.
- 12. Idealego Intradeference (Respect): selfestesn; estisfsction with conduct, sbilities and accomplishments of self.
 - (i) Although, as I shall attempt to prove, Hitler's character structure is a resction formation to tendencies of which he is highly contemptuous, both these tendencies and the contempt are largely unconscious to him. Much more conepicuous in his conscious psychology are his superiority feelings, his self-esteem, his outflying self-confidence.
 - (ii) Hitler (at the sge of nineteen years): I waited with pride and confidence to laarn the result of my entrance examination. I was so convinced of my success that the announcement of my failura came like a bolt from the blus. (M.K. 27).
 - (iii) Hitler: I dsvotsd mysolf enthueisstically to my passion for architecture...
 I was able to read or draw late into the night.
 I was never tired. Thus my belief that my besutiful dream of the future would become reslity, perhaps only after many years, was strengthened. I was firmly convinced that some day I would make a name as an architect.
 (M.K. 45).
 - (iv) (Hitler believed himself a msn of destiny even while serving as a corporal): In those months, for the first time, I felt fully the whims of fortune which kept ma at the front in a place where any lucky move on the part of a negro could shoot me down, while somewhere else I would have been able to render a different earvica to my country. For I was bold anough to baliava avan than that I would have aucceaded in thie. (M.K. 244).

- (v) Hitler addrassing Schuschnigg, quoted by Fuchs: Do you not raelize that you are in the presence of the greatest Garman ever known to hietory!
- 13. n Defendence: to defend one's self-esteem varially -- by offering excuses end justifications, by blaming others, by depraciating the judges, by exalting other aspects of one's parsonality, stc.

Hitler's prime method of defending the status of his eelf ie by bleming others (extrapunitive reaction). Two other common methods are these:

(i) Connacting salf with other (respactable or great) paople, who have done tha eeme, or had the same happen to them, or suffered from the same defect (n Rec).

Hitlar: If wa committed high traason, than countless others did the aama. I deny all guilt so long as I do not find added to our little company those gentlamen who halpad... (M.N.O. 80).

(ii) Procleiming worth of criticized pert of salf, or enother part, or of salf es a whole (n Rac): to ascart the marit of what others condemn; to believe a defect with an assat; to wipe out a failure by recalling one's auccesses in this or in some other field.

Hitlar: I believe that as e Nationalist Socialist I appear in the ayae of many bourgeois democrate as only a wild men. But as a wild man I still believe myealf to be a better European... (M.N.O. 404).

Throughout the whole of Hitler's spoken end written words ere to be found meny evidences that he highly epproves of the traits attributed to him in this section and, more then that, edvocates their adoption es the preferred pettern of behavior for the whole nation.

Hitler: ...if e people is to become free it needs pride end will-power, defience, hate, hate end once egein hate. (M.N.O. 49).

- 14. Ineult es etimulus: It is charecteristic of the proud counterective type of personelity that his energiee ere not engaged unless he has been insulted or injured or imagined himself belittled in some wey. Thus the men of this sort will often ectively each such a etimulue. The following quotetion illustrates this important principle:
 - (i) Hitler: If we hed been attacked et that time, nay, if one hed only leughed et us, we would have been happy in both events. For the depressing thing was neither the one nor the other, but it was only the complete leck of ettention we encountered et thet time. This wes true most of ell for my person. (E.K. 490).
- 15. Compulsive Criminality: Having sterted on e course of revengeful aggression instigeted by e reel or supposed insult the individuel is often led to ect or to plan actions which ere opposed by his conscience. Therefore he is compelled, if he is to fulfill his resolution of revenge, to repress his superego. This often results in a condition of mounting unconscious guilt which must be further subdued by a repetition or extension of the criminel behevior in order, es it were, to prove, by the success ettending this conduct, that it is fevored by fortune end hence right. This is demonstrated in Hitler's cese end is en importent dynemicel principle of his pereonality. It is neceeery for him to commit crimee, more crimes, in order to eppeaee his superego. As econ es succeseful offensive ection becomes impossible, the man will become e victim of e long-represeed superego, e condition which will lead to suicide or mentel breekdown.

VI. DYNAMICAL INTERPRETATION OF THE MAJOR CONFIGURATION

A. REVENGEFUL DOMINANCE AS A COUNTER-ACTION TO INSULTED NARCISM

Almost ell psychologiats who have analyzed Hitler's parsonality have interprated it by referring, emong other concepts, to Adler's formula: craving for aupariority coming out of unbaareble fealings of inferiority. Wa also agree to this conception with special stress leid upon the press of Inault (wounded narcism) end the consequent residuel tension of ravange bolted up for years and then finding expression in the Cult of Brutality. Even some of his non-paychological associatae reached essentially the same conclusion.

- (i) Rauschning: Evary conversation, however unimportent, seamed to show that this man was filled with an immeasurable hatrad. Hatrad of what? It was not easy to eay. Almost anything might suddenly inflame his wrath and his hatrad. He seemed always to feel the need of something to hate.
- (ii) Rauchning: In the hershness and unexampled cynicism of Hitler there is something more than the repressed affect of a hypereensitiveness, which has handicapped ite bearar. It is the urge to reprieel and vangaanca, a truly Russian-nihilistic faaling.

(iii) Rauachning: Hatred -- personal hatrad -- reng out in his worda, revanga for early years of poverty, for disappointed hopes, for a life of deprivation and humiliation.

(iv) Haiden: Anyone acquainted with the unhappy life of this lonaly man knows why hatred and parsecution mania guidad his first political footsteps. In his heart he nuraed a grudge against the world, and he vanted it on guilty and innocent alike. His crecking voice, his jarky gait, his eawing gestures expressed a hatred of which all who saw him were conscioue.

Hitler hes experienced almost all the varieties of prese that in our experience ere capable of giving rise to wounded narcism; chiefly the following deserve mention:

- 1. Physical infariority:- Hitler's youthful freilty end general bodily ewkwerdness and weaknaae has elreedy been describad.
- 2. Prasa of aggrassive dominanca (insult):- Knowing something of the cheracter of Alois Hitler, we cen eafaly infer experience of abesament and humiliation auffared by the son.

- 3. Press of rejection: Some evidence for this has already been given, (Sec.IV), and more will follow.
- 4. Preas of lack (poverty and low social status):Here we would point especially to the four years of living among the derelicta of Vienna.
- 5. Prees of failure: The failure to graduate from the Realsohule; the failure to pass the examinationa of the Academy of Arts; and the failure to make his living in Vienna -- these and many others were summated to produce feelinge of humilistion and inadequacy.
- 6. Prass of subordinate office, success of rivals:- The fact that Hitler was not promoted in the Army beyond the position of corporal and that he must have eeen many younger men being advanced above him halped to aggravate his wounded pride.
- 7. Sexual inferiority:- Perhaps crucial in this whole cluster of debssing presa is Hitler's reported insbility to have sexual intercourse. This may be due to physical or psychic impotence.
- 8. Breakdown of course: Hitlar's war neurosie is a sign of a breakdown of nervous stamina in the face of overwhelming odds, which was probably experienced by him as a humilistion, especially in view of his ago ideal.

- (a) Our own hypothetical reconstruction of the traumetic events which led to the feeling of insulted pride would be somewhat as follows:
- es the result of the prese of aggressive dominance and insult from the father, laading eventually to the death of the mother. According to our hypothesis the boy Hitler identified with hie mother on the lowest level of his neture. This led to the desire for revenge: aggreseive dominence end humilietion of the fether.
- (ii) Press of rejection coming from the father and perhaps to some extant from the mother (birth of youngar sibling). This led to the boy's desire for suprafiliation, incorporation in a larger and more powerful group, nemely, Germany, and a feeling of supariority (glory) in this fantecied ellience, together with the justification of releasing aggression against hie Government, Auetria.
- (iii) Abesement end humiliation on eelf as a result of the press aggressive dominence and insult from his father. This is similar to the treuma in (i) except here it is on his own account entirely.

It led to the eame counteractive need for aggreeeive dominance and vengeance, the goal baing humiliation of the father and omnipotence for himself. The death of his father when he was thirteen yeare old and the five subsequent years when he had hie mother pretty much to himself may have served to angender the confidence (enjoyed throughout his life) that he would eventually succeed as ruler.

the result of press rejection, prees deprivation, and preas aggressive dominance. Since many of the prominent positions in Vienna were held by Jews, aome of Hitler's anti-Semitiem, as well as his hatred of Vienna, can be attributed to humiliations raceived from the upper classes during these years. These wounds to pride helped to augment the mounting residual tension of aggrassive dominance. Later his acceptance as a coldier in the German Army served to relieve his painful feelings and give him feelings of exultation similar to those experienced when he joined the Nationalist's Club as a boy.

(v) Humiliation of eelf (war neuroeis) concomitant with the humiliation and abasement of his motherland as the result of prese aggressive dominance and inault (Versailles Treaty) at the hands of the Allies. As in the previous four cases, this led to the need for aggressive dominance with the aim of reinstating the power and glory of Germany and wreaking vengeance on the Allies.

The hypothesis of identification with the mother on a physical erotic level cells for the accumption of strein of femininity in Hitler, combined with e trend of passive homosexuslity and for this we must now liet the evidence.

- I. Femininity, Passive Homosexuality, Masochism.
- (a) The feminine component in Hitler's physical constitution had already been described
- (1) Feminine traits. Hitler's sentimentality, his emotionality, his ehrieking at the climax of his speeches, his artistic inclinations, his sudden collapses, his occasional softness -these are all typical not so much of a woman as of a woman in man.
- (ii) Identification with mother. Hitler's belief that he is going to die of cancer as did his mother is suggestive of an underlying empathic relationship.

- (iii) Abasement to euperiors, etrong meles. Instances of exaggerated submissiveness to powerful superiors have already been listed.
- (iv) Cathexis of male symbols. Hitler has a special liking for a multiplicity of tall, conspicuoue columns in architecture end for paintings of stallione (they must never be mares).
- (v) Attrection to homosexuals followed by their murder. It is known that Hitler had a special admiration for Roehm; whether it was thie individual or Hitler himself who was chiefly responsible in attracting such a large proportion of homosoxuele to the Nazi Party is uncertain, but it is known that after two or three months of enxiety and delusions to the effect that Roehm and his fellow homosexuals were plotting to usurp power Hitler had them all murdered in the purge of 1934.
- (vi) Homosexual panic. Some of the nightmaree described by several informents are very auggestive of homosexual panic.

Rauschning: Hitler wakes et night with convulsive shrieks. He shouts for help. He sits on the edge of his bed, es if unable to stir. He chakes with fear, making the whole bed vibrate. He shouts confused, totally unintelligible phrases. He gasps, as if imagining himself to be suffocating...Hitler stood swaying in his room, looking wildly about him. "He! He! He's been here!" he gesped. His lips were blue. Sweat streamed down his fece. Suddenly he began to reel off figuree, and odd words end broken phrasee, entirely devoid of sense...then he euddenly broke out, "There, there! In the corner! Who's that?" He stamped end chricked in the femilar way...

A number of metaphors used by Hitler, images of being stabbed in the resr, recur in his writings.

- (vii) Hitler: The development has shown that the people who stab with etilettos in Germeny ere more powerful than before.
- (viii) Hitler: Slowly the fear of the Merxist weepon of Jewry einks into the breine end eouls of decent people like a nightmere. (M.K. 447).
- (ix) Hitler: One begins to tremble before the terrible enemy, end thus one has become hie final victim. (M.K. 447).
- (x) Hitler: There can never be unity between those who menned the walls in the hour of denger, and those who in the lest moment pushed the stiletto into their becke.
- (xi) Hitler: God be thenked, this is just the meaning of Germanic democracy, that no unworthy climber or moral ehirker cen come in the back wey to rule his fellow citizens...but ehould, nevertheless, such a fellow try to sneek in, then he will be essily found out end ruthlessly rebuffed. Out with you, cowardly wretch! Step back, you ere soiling the steps; the front atairs leading to the Pentheon of History is not for sneaks but for heroee. (M.K. 117).

Pertinent et this point, perheps, is Hitler's fear of being poisoned by some deethly powder eprinkled on his bedolothes; as wes shown on his visit to Rome and at other times, his bed must be made up by a woman in a particular way, never by a man.

- (b) Need for abasement: Hitler's exaggerated submissiveness has been described (B, 1 (ii)), but a few more notable quotations should be added to transmit the passion that acmetimes accompanies this tendency in Hitlar. They are all strongly auggestive of masochiam.
 - (i) Hitler, quoted by Rauschning: The plain man in the atreet respects nothing but brutal strength and ruthlessness -- women, too, for that matter, women and children. They need wholesome fear. They want to fear something. They want someone to frighten them and make them ahudderingly submissive.
 - (ii) Hitler, quotad by Rauschning: I have seen the viaion of the new man -- fearless and formidable. I ahrank from him.
 - (iii) Hitler: Like a woman, whose psychic feeling is influenced less by abstract reasoning than by an undefinable, sentimental longing for complementary strength, who will submit to the atrong man rather than dominate the weakling, thus the masses love the ruler rather than the suppliant. (M.K. 56).
 - (N.B., Another excellent example of projection of self).
 - (iv) Hitler: He who would win the great masses must know the key which opens the door to thair hearts. Its name is not objectivity, that is, weakness, but will power and strength. (M.K. 458).

Hitler has a peculiar habit of falling to the ground suddonly when faced by a critical situation or insurmountable frustration. He does not struggle persistently until he is completely everpowered but he makes en enermous show of strength and, when he sees the odds are against him, unexpectedly collapses.

Together with these critical abssements, ws might include the intraggressive tendencies: his prococupation with suicide and dosth.

(o) Cethoxis for Hitler Youth.

- (i) Hitler, quoted by Rauschning: But my magnificent youngsters! Are there finer ones anywhere in the world? Look et these young men and boys! What material! With them I can make a new world
- (ii) Hitlsr: ...how did the eyes of my boys (Hitler youth) shine when I mado clear to them the assossity of their mission. (M.K. 729).
- (iii) Hitler: ...vsnity in a beautiful, woll shaped body (to be encouraged by men wesring loss concealing clothes).

It is reported by Rauschning that Hitler has had overt homosexual relations and in this connection has mentioned three lovers, one, Forstor (Gauloiter of Danzig).

II. Repression of Femininity, Counteraction by Identification with Poworful Male Idealego

The ruthless aggressiveness of Hitler is the trait which first strikes the syes of the whole world, but it is not the healthy eggressiveness of a fullblooded mele enimal but a reaction formation to the tendencies which we have subsumed under inferiority, femininity, pessive homosexuality. Hitler's eggressiveness is the compulsive frantic hate of a neurotic for some unrevenged insult of infancy. The varieties of expressions of this vindictive will to power have already been fully listed. There remains only to be mantioned the many indications that we have of en intense and unrelanting self-contempt which has ceused him to edmire what he is not, the very opposite of himself.

Under the heading projections, we enumerated meny instances of where Hitler attributed the traits of his inferior and rejected self to axternal objects. All of these, end there were many of them, might be cited as evidences of self-contempt, since they represent refusals to acknowledge espects of himself. Here we have to call attention to the opposite tendency, namely that of praising the entithesis of whet he is or hes been in reality.

- (a) Hitler has talked incessantly of superiority of breed. He has praised the eristocracy es the noble result of the process of naturel selection -- the nobility were the superior race. He, in contrast, was born of lowly stock, several members of his femily being mentally retarded, one feebleminded. His mother was a simple peasant and domestic servant, and his father an illegitimate son who begot an illegitimate child.
- which his own experts escribe to the Nordic race, and he could never become a member of his own elite guard; and yet he seys: "Strong and handsome must my young men be. I will have them fully trained in all physical exercises. I intend to have an athletic youth -- that is the first and chief thing." Note that Hitler has never had the slightest aptitude for athletics.
- (c) Hitler is unmarried and has no children, and yet preeches increase of population, the sanctity of the family, end the necessity of beering more and more Germans.

(d) Hitler's own life ie one of individualistic enarchy -- self-willed end disorderly end yet he praaches "my new order" end demands punctilious discipline from his eubordinatss.

All these contrasts, and there ere meny more of them, are pitiful demonstrations of Hitler's self-loething and as each clinch the diagnosis that we have outlined here. The nearest to e recorded confession of his own self-contempt that has ever come to ue is e stetement of Hitler's reported by Rauschning.

- (i) I em beginning with the young. We older ones are used up. Yes, we ere old already. We ere rotten to the marrow...we ere cowerdly end sentimental. We are beering the burden of a humiliating pest, and have in our blood the dull recollection of sarfdom and servility. But my magnificent youngsters! etc.
- (ii) The uninitiated but pure man is tempted to ebendon himself in Klingsor's megic garden, to the lusts and excesses of corrupt civilization, instead of joining the elite of knights who guerd the secret of life, pure blood... ell of ue are suffering from the ailment of mixed, corrupted blood. How can we purify ourselves and make atonement? ...mount the steps of a new nobility.

IV. Negative Cathexis of the Jewieh Race.

This is es good a place es any to mention Hitler's Anti-Semitiem and to list what seems to have been, in his case, the chief determinents of this sentiment:

- 1. The influence of e number of political thinkara and speekers whom he edmired: Luegar, Feder, Eckert, etc.
- 2. His repressed hatred and the need to find en object on which to vent it: the suitability of the Jew as a scapagoat because he does not fight with fiets and weepone.
- on which to project his own repudiated background end traite: his Jewish god-father (end possibly y his Jewish grandfather), his physical timidity and eansitiveness, his polymorphous sexual impulses.
- 4. The recognition that the repressed aggression in the German people after the Versailles Treaty required a scapegoat; condamnation of the Jew se good political atretegy.
- 5. The realization, after having once embarked on the road to militarism, that the stirred-up eggreeaion of hie followers naeded some outlat -- e warming up period -- during the years they had to wait before they were strong anough to declare war on e foreign power. Directing eggreeeion against e common enemy would greatly diminish the likelihood of its being turned egainet himself.

- 6. The intensity of his Anti-Semitism is partly accounted for by one of his principles of political action: focus hostility on a single enemy et a time.
- 7. In building hie militery machine the antimiliteristic Jewish people could not be of much halp to him. At bottom Fasciem is the advocacy of the aggreseive drive over and ebove the acquieitive drive (with which the Jew has generally been identified), end, by the same token, it is the substitution of Power end Glory for Peece and Prosperity, e materielistic peradice on earth (with which Communism and the Jew have also been identified). Finally, the Nazi doctrine of fenatical irretionality (thinking with the blood) is antipathetic to the intellectual reletivism of the Jew. Thue there are several fundamental points of opposition (as well as certain points of kinehip) between Nezi ideology end Jewieh ideology.

VI. SECTIONS B, C, D, E. DEVELOPMENT OF HITLER'S SEX COMPLEXES

(Omitted from this edition)

By careful study of the three thousand metaphore thet ere to be found in MEIN KAMPF it was possible to work out the chief petterne of Hitler's emotionel and perverse eexuel complexes. The conclusions reached by the use of this method were later verified in a conversation with e man who hae questioned two of the women with whom Hitler has had reletions. There were no discrepencies between the conclusione reached here and these first hand reporte. Although the diecovery of these sexual petterns is helpful to e psychiatriet in arriving at a complete formulation of Hitler's character end therefore indirectly pertinent to the finel diagnosis and the predictions of hie behavior. it has no beering on the politicel eituation. Consequently, the eections deeling with this aspect of his personelity have been omitted.

VII. ABILITIES AND PRINCIPLES OF ACTION

Hitler has a number of unusual abilities of which his opponents should not be ignorant. Not only is it important to justly appreise the atrength of an enemy but it is well to know whether or not he possesses capacities and techniques which can be appropriated to good advantage. Hitler's chief abilities, realizations, and principles of action as a political figure, all of which involve an uncanny knowledge of the psychology of the everege man, are briefly these:

- 1. Full appreciation of the importance of the masses in the success of any movement: Two quotations might serve to bring out this point.
 - (i) Hitler: The leck of knowledge of the internal driving forcae of great changes led to en insufficient evaluation of the importance of the great masses of the people; from this resulted the ecanty interest in the sociel queetion, the deficient and insufficient courting of the eoul of the netion's lower clesses... (M.K. 138).
- (ii) Haiden speaks of "Hitler's frequently noted incapacity to impose his will in a small circle, and his consummate skill in winning over e crowd prepared by publicity and etage management, and then, with its aid, vanquishing the smell circle, too."
- 2. Racognition of the inestimable value of winning the support of youth; realization of the immense momentum given a sociel movement by the wild fervor end enthusiesm of young men and women. Here we must elso include the importence of early training end indoctrination.

- 3. An identification, through feeling, with the deepeat needs and sentiments of the average German and the ability to give passionate expression to these longings.
- 4. Capacity to appeal to the most primitive, ee well as the most ideal, inclinations in man, to arouse the beest instincts and yet clock them with nobility, justifying ell actions as means to the attainment of an ideal goel. Hitler has eeen that men will not combine and dedicate themselves to a common purpose unless this purpose be an ideal one capable of survival beyond their generation. He has perceived also that elthough men will die only for an ideal their continued zest and enterprise can be meintained only by a succession of more immediate and earthly astisfections.
- are es hungry for a sustaining ideology in political action ee they ere for deily bread. It is with the masses that religious belief has teken root end maintained itself end in the last decedes the idaologias of communism and faacism heve also flourished among the common paopla. It is an error to balieva as many democratic leaders do that the avaraga man cannot undaratand and caras nothing for political philosophy. Hitler is most specific on this point, two quotations from his writings being particularly pertinent.

- (i) All force which does not apring from a firm apiritual foundation will be hesitating and uncertain. It lacks the stability which can only rast on a fanatical view of life.

 (M.K. 222).
- (ii) Evary attampt at fighting a view of life by maans of forca will finally fail, unlass the fight against it raprasants the form of an attack for the sake of a new apiritual diraction. Only in the atruggle of two views of life with each other can the weapon of brute force, used continuously and ruthlessly, bring about the decision in favor of the side it aupports. (M.K. 223).
- 5. The ability to analyze complex acciel conditions into a few dominant human forces: Hitler is speaking the truth when he eays, "I have the gift of reducing all problems to their simplest foundations... A gift for tracing back all theories to their roots in reality." He has the ability, Rauschning tells us, "of breaking through the well of prejudices and conventional theories of the experts, and in so doing, he has frequently discovered emazing truthe."

- forces in vivid, concrete imagery that is understandable end moving to the ordinary man. This comes down to the use of metaphors in the form of imagery which, as Aristotle has said, is the most powerful force on earth. Public speakers of recent years eeem to have overlooked the importance of this principle, relying more on the mershelling of cold, objective facts and figures.
- the peoples end by reference to the great classical mythological themes evoke the deepeat unconecious emotione in his audience. The feet that the unconecious mind is more intensely affected by the great eternal symbols and themes, (that it naturally thinks in these terms,) is not generally understood by speakers and writers. Undoubtedly in Hitler's case the permeability of his ego to unconscious processes has mede this form of utterance more natural than it would be for others.
- 9. Realization that enthusiestic political ection does not take place if the emotions ere not involved. Hitler has elweys ineisted that he wee bringing about a veritable conversion in the personalities of his adherents rether than a mere intellectual agreement with his views.

- and dramatic intensity in the conductance of larga meetings, ralliee, and festivala. This involves not only en eppreciation of what the artist -- the writer, musician, and peinter -- can accomplish in the way of evoking popular support but also the leader's recognition of the necessity of his participation in the total dramatic effect as chief character and here. Thus Hitler has become mastar of all the arts of high-lighting his own rôle in the movement for a greeter Germeny. Democratic leaders, on the other hand, disregarding the fact that the artist is trained above all others to animate the human spirit, have disregarded this important aspect of life.
- concern and protectiveness of his people, to represent himself es the bearer of their burdens and their future, with the result that many people, particularly the women, feel tenderly and compassionately about him, being always careful to avoid inflicting undue annoyance or suffering on their leader. The intense loyalty of Hitler's Body Guard is an illustration of this protectivenese.

- 12. Dedication to his mission. This most essential of all Hitler's characteristics should perhape have been mentioned first. What is involved here is an intense and profound insociation with tha German people, or at least with his vision of what the German peopla might become. All close observere have agread that Hitlar is sincere in this feeling, and whether this is strictly true or not, he has eucceaded in convincing his people that he is a passionats and devoted patrict. It is the spectacle of his fer-eesing dedicated vision and firm dedicated utterances which arouse the salflass energies of his followers. Citizena of democratic countries who have been brought up in the tradition of extrema individualism cannot readily appreciate this cubmission of the leader to a sociel purpose. They are naturally skapticel of Hitler's sincarity and baliava that it is forced end artificial. I submit, on the contrary, that it is this inaccietion, as we hava strassed above, which is responsible for the meintenance of Hitler's partiel sanity, daspita the presance of neurotic and psychotic tranda.
- 13. Self-confidence and sense of infellibility.

 This might have been detrimental to Hitler's popularity

if his decisions hed often met with feilure, but in as much es his riee to power wes almost phenomenel end events proved that he was so often right in his predictions, his claim to infellibility was accepted end his word was eventually reverenced as a divine pronouncement.

- 14. Fanaticel etubbornness in hie edherence to a few principles and to one common goel.
 - (i) Hitler, quoted by Deuel: Only a etorm of glowing peesion can turn the destinies of nations, but this pession can only be roused by a men who carries it within himself.
 - (ii) ...the forceful impression of great overwhelming viewpoints...the convincing force of unconditional belief in them. (M.K. 570).
- tion. Maetery of the art of political organizetion. Here undoubtedly Hitler was assisted by several of hie shrewder essocietes, but his own judgment in matters of organization was usually influential above that of the others.
- eidee whoee telents complement his own. In meny reepects Hitler is deficient, especially in the prectices of orderly administration, but he wes capable of finding sufficient skill among his edherents and make them work for him regardless of their failings in other respects.

- Hitler is unusuel in history in his concep-17. tion of the leeder ee e orestor of sociel forms. Holding this view. it is naturel that he should conduct hie life et certain ecesons es en ertiet does, eeeking rest end eeclusion end weiting for the vision or plen to develop in his eubconecious. What other politiciens refer to es hie bohemieniem. his disorderly and romantio etyle of life is very compereble to the pettern which euthore heve found most effective in the production of their worke. Temperementally indeed. Hitler is the arch-romantic. might suppose that thie way of governing one's life hae no place in politics, but without question in this inetence meny of the etertling innovations introduced by the Nezis are the results of Hitler's relience upon the creative imagination directed toward sociel issuee.
- has tectical genius. The perticular feature that has impressed most observers has been his uncennily precise timing of decisions and actions. As Thyssen has put it, "Sometimes his intelligence is setonishing...mireculous political intuition, devoid of all morel sense, but extraordinarily precise. Even in a very complex situation he discerns what is possible, and what is not."

- operation of conscience in arriving at political decisions has eliminated once and for all the force which checks and complicates the forward-going thoughts and resolutions of most socially responsible statesmen. Thue, Hitlar's course is immensely simplified since it is not incumbent upon him to respect the dictates of conscience and so reject apath of action which appeals to him as being most effective. Other statesmen, on the contrary, must either renounce dertain programs or pull their punches.
- of terror from the communiets and employed it with more effectiveness then his instructors.
- 21. Mestery of the ert of propagande. This has consisted in the following of certain rules such as: naver to edmit a fault or wrong; navar to accept blame; concentrate on one enemy at a time; blame that enemy for averything that goes wrong; take advantage of avery opportunity to raise a political whirlwind.

Meny of the specific abilities listed above ere exercized es part and percel of his quite unusuel power as a popular orator. So much has been written about Hitler's ability to galvanize an audience by his gastures, the eadance of his assistance, the resoluteness of his declarations, the passion of his appeals that any further description here would be auperfluous. It is clear that Hitler becomes trensported during a speach and exhibite a personality that is kept in the background at other times. When face to face with his public he becomes a clairvoyant, shemen in a trance, as he relinquishes normal controls and allows his emotions full sway.

PREDICTIONS

I shall assume that from now on the Alliad Nations will be closing in on Germany; that Hitler will be confronted by an increasing number of military satbacks in the field, by the devestation of one industrial center after another, and by the spresd of a defeatiat spirit among the civilian population.
How will be behave? There are various possibilities, some of which are more or less desirable, others more or less undesirable, from the Allied standpoint.
It is possible, however, that some of the less desirable finel acts of his career may be prevented.
The ohief possibilities are these:

neurotic: - his capacity to make correct decisions, to device effective strategy, to encourage his people, will diminish eteadily. For eight months there have been eigne of such a breakdown of psychio atrangth. Hitler has not appeared and apoken in public at oustomary occasions, or, if he has apoken, his words have lacked confidence and sustaining value. Savaral times there have been rumors that he had retired to Berchtesgaden, the victim of nervous illness. Whether this is true or not, it can be certeinly predicted that Hitler will experience an increasing number of hysterical seizures in which he will pace and stamp the floor, shriek with rage, and systematically collapse in tears. He will seek the solitude of his refuge in the mountains where he will be tormented by dreedful nightmares and melancholie, and become inert.

Then, after a period of recuperation, he will arrive et a new plen of aggressive offenae. If his military staff are opposed to it, he will assume command himself, and leed his troops on enother desperate essault egainst the Russian lines. If unsuccessful, he will have more nervous seizures, relinquish command, and again retreet to Berchtesgaden. Hitler has no capacity for sustained defense.

He will speak less and leas in public, because he cannot fece his people if his star is not ascending. He can apeak only when he enticipates progress or after a victory. The Russians have shattered Hitler's confidence; and without confidence he is paralyzed. If he stood before his followers now he would probably weep.

Without doubt he will become increesingly feerful of being poisoned, betreyed, or ehot.

Whetever else heppens, the ebove course of events will almost certainly occur. Hitler will become lese end lese of a leeder; others will take over. On the one hand, the militery etaff; end, on the other, Himmler, Ribbentrop, Goering, Goebbels, Företer end Koch. There will be dissensions between the Army end the Party; as well as between the Perty leeders. But the people will be kept ignorent as long as possible of Hitler's failing nerves, and they will not easily lose their faith in him. Furthermore, he will always reserve end exercise the right to step in at any moment and dictate what shall be done. Thus we can expect to heer nothing of him for a while and then auddenly he will appear unharalded at some apot and something new will happen.

2. Hitler mey go insene: - He has the meke-up of e perencid echizophrenic, end the loed of frustretion end feilure that is coming to him mey crack his recietance, ceucing him to yield his will to the turbulent forces of his unconscioue. This is not undesirable; because, even if the truth be kept hidden from the people, the greatest source of strength in Germeny will be removed from the scene of ection, end morele will rapidly deteriorate as rumors spread. Furthermore, the Legend of the Hero will be severely demaged by such an outcome. There is no good historical instance of the deification of a military or political leader who was defeated and went insene. Finally, if Hitler became insane, he would probably fell into the hands of the Allied Nations, and this, as I shall ergue, would be the most desirable possible outcome.

- 3. Hitler mey get killed in battle: At e critical moment Hitler may decide to lead his élite troopa egeinst the Russiens, exposing himself so thet he will get killed, end so live in the heerts of his countrymen ea e veliant hero. He is very likely to choose this course, most undesirable from our Allied point of view. It is undesirable, first, because his death will serve es en exemple to all his followers to fight with fenatical deeth-defying energy to the bitter end, end second, because it will insure Hitler'e immortality -- the Siegfried who led the Aryan hoata egeinat Bolahevism and the Slev.
- 4. Hitler mey be killed by a German: Hitler is most efficiently protected and it is not likely that anyone will wilfully attempt to kill him. But he may contrive to have someone, a helf-crezy perenoid lika himself, inatigated to do the dead at some pres rrangad moment when he purposely exposes his If ha could errenge to have a person in public. Jaw kill him, then ha could dia in the balief that his fellow countryman would rise in their wrath end messacre avery remaining Jew in Garmany. Thus, he would get his ultimate ravange. This would be the most deaterdly plen of all, end the very most undeair-It would increase the fenaticism of the soldiere. and creete e Legand in conformity with the encient pettarn. Siegfried stebbed in the beck by Hegen. Caeeer by Brutus, Christ betreyed by Judes -- except thet hera tha murderar would not be e close followar. However, it is just posaibla thet Hitlar could parsuada the baloved Föratar to kill him.

5. Hitler mey commit suicide: - Hitlar has often vowed that he would commit suicida if his plans miecerried; but if he chooses this course he will do it at the leet momant end in the most dramatic possible menner. He will ratract, let us say, to the impregnable little fortrass he has built for himself on the top of the mountain beyond the Barghof (Berchtasgeden). There slone he will wait until troops come to teke him prisoner. As a climex he will blow up the mountain and himself with dynemite, or make a funeral pyre of his retreat and throw himself on it (a auitable Götterdemerung) or kill himself with a silver bullet (as did the Emparor Christophe), or possibly throw himself off the parapet. This is not at all unlikely. For us it would be an undesirable outcome.

- 6. Hitler mey seek refuge in a nautral country:

 It is not likely that Hitler, concerned as he is with his immortality on earth, would take so cowardly a course. But one of his followers might drug him, and take him in a plane bound to Switzerland, and then persuade him that he should stay there to write his long-planned Bibla for the Garmanic folk. Since the here's desartion of his people would considerably damage the Legand, this outcome would be much better that either 3 or 4.
- 7. Hitler mey die: -Thore is no reason to beliave that Hitler will die of natural causes in the next three or four years; but he might poison himself and have it ennounced that he had died of cencar of the stomech, or some other incurable illness. This outcome would be natural.
- 8. Hitler may be saized by the military command or by e revolutionary fection in Germany before the end of the war and immured in some prison fortress.

This evant is difficult to envisage from what we surmize and have been told of the popularily of the man and the protection afforded him, but if it were to transpire, it would put an ignominious and to the myth of the invincible leadar and eventually delivar him into our hands.

9. Hitler may fall into our hands before or after the Germans have surrandered: - This would be the next most desirable outcome after 8 but is perhaps the least likely.

SECTION IV

Predictions of Hitler's Behavior in the Coming Future

(See Section I, Part B)

SECTION V

Suggestions for the Treatment of Hitler, Now and After Germany's Surrender

(See Section I, Part C)

Section VI

Suggestions for the Treatment of Germany

(See Section I, Part D)